Now the test was ready. As four points were allowed for a perfect answer to a question, it was necessary to determine how many points would indicate an expert, how many a journeyman or apprentice. This was determined by the scores which had been made by the known experts, journeymen and apprentices. Ordinarily the expert would score higher than the journeyman, and the journeyman higher than the apprentice, but it frequently happened that a few of the journeymen would score as high as the lowest of the experts, and a few of the apprentices as high as the lowest of the journeymen. There would consequently be a certain amount of overlapping between the groups and, in calibrating, the dividing line was determined so that the overlapping would be reduced to the minimum. When these dividing lines, or "critical scores," as they were known, were settled upon, the oral test was completed and ready for editing, printing, and distribution to the examining stations in the cantonments.

But, though most tests included the oral test, and, it was found, in most cases, to measure with fairness a man's trade ability, the committee decided that it should be supplemented, whenever possible, with picture and performance tests. The picture test was standardized in much the same way as the oral test, and with the same scrupulous care. The questions in the picture tests related to pictures of tools and appliances used in the trade. The candidate would be required to name the tools correctly, and tell what each was used for, and he might be asked to explain parts of appliances which were not visible in the picture.

The picture test was used largely as a check on the oral test. If it were found, for instance, that a candidate did very well in the oral test, and that there was danger of his having been prepared for it by some man who had previously taken it, he would be given the picture test and the composite score would be used instead of the oral test score.

The performance tests were used in many trades in which the candidate had made a good showing in the oral and picture tests, but they were also largely used in trades which were solely a matter of skill, and in which oral and picture tests were not feasible. The performance tests were standardized in much the same manner as the oral tests and after a conference with the experts of the trade.

In the performance test, the candidate would be required to give a practical demonstration of his ability. He would be asked, for example, to drive a motor truck over a course, if he was a chauffeur, or repair a carburetor or a magneto, if a moto mechanic. In other trades he would be asked to perform quickly and with a small amount of apparatus some simple task which would clearly indicate his degree of skill.

Here, as in the other tests, the principle followed was that the value of a test was not in its theoretical exactness, but in its proved ability to pick and classify men according to their skill. It was found that if the test classified correctly men whose skill was known, it could be relied upon also to classify men whose skill was unknown.

Through experience it was found that the performance test would have to meet the following requirements: It would have to require the minimum quantity of tools and material, capable of standardization; a journeyman should not require more than forty-five minutes to perform it; it should be typical of the work required; the operations should be so exact that a standard and correct form of product should always be obtainable.

Administering the Tests.

The trade tests were given in what is known in the cantonments as the "Mustering Office," the record-taking office of the Committee on Classification of Personnel. Here the thousands of recruits coming in through the draft, having previously taken the physical and psychological examinations, were mustered into the army. On entering the long building their service records and location cards were made out, and then they passed on to the interviewers on the qualification cards. The interviewers made a record of the civil life occupations of the men and other information needed by the army, and the men passed on to the trade test section. Their cards, now filled out, were examined to ascertain the trades at which they had been employed, and they were asked a few questions to determine whether the tests could be based on the facts on the cards. Often it was found that the recruit had made misstatements to the interviewers, not knowing that he was to be checked on them later, but if he claimed any trade ability he was assigned to one of the examiners.

The candidate got a seat across a table from the examiner, whose papers were covered so that they could not be seen by the recruit. The test did not begin at once. The examiner first set the candidate at his ease. He inquired about the weather and how the recruit liked camp life, and carried on a general conversation until he felt sure that the candidate had lost all nervousness and would do justice to himself in the test.

The examiner then asked the questions, as they were worded in the tests, and scored on the basis of what the candidate said and not on what the examiner thought the candidate knew. The examiner was not allowed to vary the wording of one of the questions, nor say or do anything which might help the candidate along or indicate whether the replies to the questions were right or not, for great pains had been taken to standardize the tests and make them fair.

When the oral test was completed the candidate might get a picture or performance test, according to the nature of his trade and the score made on the oral tests. In any case, when the tests were completed, the army had measured the man's proficiency at his trade, and he was passed on to the allotment and insurance department, from which he passed out of the "mustering office" an American soldier with all his records and papers completed and ready to step into his uniform. The examinations had probably taken a week, all told.

When the trade tests were completed the ratings were placed on the qualification cards and the cards "tabbed" and filed. A green tab was placed on a certain part of the card to indicate that the soldier was an expert or a journeyman in his principal trade, a black tab to indicate an expert or an apprentice in some secondary trade, an orange tab to indicate an apprentice in some other trade. The personnel officer then could run through thousands of cards in a few minutes and pick out the number of experts, journeymen, and apprentices available in any one trade.

The cards were made in duplicate, and the second card given to the officer immediately commanding the soldier, who thus would also have a record of the ability and potential capabilities of every man under him. Furthermore, the ratings were made known to the War Department at Washington, so that the General Staff at all times knew the number and calibre of men in every trade available in every section of the country.

The tests, first tried out in Camp Dix last June, proved a success from the very beginning, and were soon installed in every National Army cantonment in the United States. In the July draft 15 per cent. of the recruits were tested for trade ability at Camp Dix and, by September, between 50 and 60 per cent. of the men entering the army were being examined and more than seventy tests were in actual use. It was claimed that the records, before considered 50 per cent. correct, were now nearly 90 per cent. correct. The Committee on Classification of Personnel in the army claimed that its work increased the efficiency of the army by at least 10 per cent., but it was probably much higher.

The experience at Camp Dix, and at the other camps for that matter, was that the tests were fair and exact, and that they actually did determine whether a man was an expert, a journeyman or an apprentice. The expert not only answered the questions correctly, but it was found that he invariably answered in the words given in the replies in the tests. The journeyman was not so sure of himself; he usually missed one or two of the questions altogether, and some of his replies only approximated the correct replies. The apprentice was still more uncertain in his replies; he replied correctly to a few of the questions, guessed at others, and scored as he was expected to score.

The man whom the trade test hit the hardest was the one who was trying to bluff his way through. He might answer one or two of the questions after a fashion. He guessed at several more, gave lengthy reasons why he was unable to answer the others, and always got the novice rating. He was probably a man who in some large foundry or plant, where there was an elaborate division of labor, assembled some one part of a machine, or did some little operation with a machine, and did not have the intelligence or the ability to get any further. He came to the camp and told the interviewer on the qualification cards that he was a machinist with many years of experienc, and as a consequence expected to be sent to one of the Government's ordnance plants, or, better still, get an indefinite furlough to return to his work.

Thus did the American Army get the right man for the job. Never before in the history of the world and its wars did the officers of an army have the exact physical, intellectual and industrial ability of their men tabulated and ready for reference whenever required.

Now that the forces that brought us victory in the war are being turned into fighters for victories in commerce and industry, it is hard to say what trade tests may have to do with the reconstruction of the world. The work of the Trade Test Section of the Committee on Classification of Personnel in the Army has been largely taken over by the Department of Labor at Washington, and it is reported that soon a 500-page book will be published by the committee or the Department of Labor, setting forth what has been accomplished in measuring men industrially. It is most probable that big corporations which employ thousands of men, and are in need of skilled men, will take advantage of this new method of getting the right man for the job.

WHAT Y. M. C. A. HAS DONE

Organization's Own Story of Its Work, Written by the Man Who Compiles Reports for Contributors

e author of this article has been for teen months a volunteer worker of Y. M. C. A., engaged in preparing rts of the organization's overseas for the information of those who ributed funds therefor.

y FRANK HUNTER POTTER.

INCE the beginning of the war the Y. M. C. A. has been engaged overseas in a work of which the general public has known rela- y nothing. Its details were, of se, familiar to the men and women contributed the money which made work possible, but there was no rea- for spreading the information more ly. It has now, however, seemed riends of the association that the ent has arrived when, in justice to association itself and to those who ve in it, these facts, on which, in a ure, their confidence is founded, ld be made more largely public.

th the outbreak of the war the seas Department of the Association n its operations in connection with combatant nations, both in the ral Powers and with the Allies. The work undertaken was with the ners. The condition of these men, ially in the Central Powers, was rable.

e, for instance, the case of the sh civilians interned at the race e of Ruhleben, in the outskirts of n. The men were housed in the es, six of them to a box stall, where were bitterly cold in Winter. They no means of exercising either their s or their bodies. The association a hut for them where they could be n, and where they could read and , have cinema shows, plays, and erts. It provided instruments for a and costumes for the plays. To the men's minds busy, it en- aged classes of all sorts, and en- d them to go on with their educa- even in the higher branches, by iding the necessary text books. It ed a library, got paints, brushes, as, and drawing materials for ar- , and promoted industrial work by ning tools and materials. Last mer there was held an exhibition of les made in the camp, and these ded leather, silver, and textile s, wood carving, and inlaid work, , bookbindings, and all sorts of ellaneous articles. Also, it helped to these men's bodies in condition by iding sporting equipment and en- aging athletic meets.

though all of these things were paid by the association, the co-operation he prisoners was enlisted in every ible way, and what all of this nt to the prisoners was shown in a r to a Y. M. C. A. member from of them who happened to be in New k recently, after his release from leben. He wrote: "I do not hesi- to say that the hut which the Y. M. A. so generously gave us was our test boon and that it saved my on and that of a good many Eng- men in the camp."

d as was the situation of the civil- at Ruhleben, we now know that it heaven as compared to that of the ish, French, Serbian, Russian, and r combatant prisoners in the prison ps, mines, and on working parties. se men were ceaselessly visited never it was permitted by the Y nts, who did what they could to help m, and by bringing them books and ng them cinema shows with their little portable machines and music with their victrolas, and by arranging religious services for them, by communicating with their relatives, by sending their photographs, and in any way which presented itself, brought a little light into their lives. And it was the only light there was. At the time this country went to war with Germany there were twenty-nine men working in the prison camps there and in Austria and in Bulgaria, and work was just beginning in those in Turkey.

After we went to war the work did not stop. All the Americans but one—who was left in charge in Berlin, by permission of the German authorities—had to be withdrawn, but their places were taken by neutrals—Dutch, Swiss, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian. There was more need for it than ever, for conditions in the camps grew steadily worse, and now it had a more personal interest, for our own boys were beginning to be brought in. It was the Y. M. C. A. Secretary in Berlin who first visited them. It was he who induced the German authorities to concentrate them so far as could be done in a single camp, and it was he who, when he found them living in unhealthy dugouts at that camp—Tuchel—got them removed to a healthier one at Rastatt. He built a hut for them, provided them with all those articles which prisoners so greatly needed—victrolas and cinemas, books, papers, sporting goods—which helped to make their lives endurable, and he got through for them their first parcels of food. In short, the "Y" man and his assistants did for our boys everything which the nature of the case permitted, though, as the number of prisoners increased, the help which he could afford grew smaller in each individual case, because it was found impossible to increase his staff.

The fate of the Italian, Russian, and Serbian prisoners was hardest of all. The prisoners' rations were barely sufficient to support life, certainly not sufficient to maintain strength with which to ward off disease. The English, French, and American prisoners were, in some measure, supported from home, but Serbia had been devastated, and after the revolution help from Russia was much diminished, while it was found very difficult to get food to the Italians. The prisoners of these nationalities died like flies. What aid the Y could give it did, and it acted as intermediary for the Red Cross. It also purchased, with funds furnished it by the relatives of Italian prisoners, food parcels in Denmark and other neutral countries, and got them through to the starving prisoners, though this was no part of its original plan. But throughout the war the practice of the association has been to help where help was needed, regardless of red tape, and when men were dying of hunger there was no room for discussion.

This is only an outline of what the Y has done for prisoners in the Central Empires. What it has done there it has done in France and England, Italy and Russia for the German and Austrian prisoners there. While this policy was suggested on grounds of humanity, it was necessitated by the fact that unless work were done for enemy prisoners all privileges for work among allied prisoners would be withdrawn by the Central Powers.

Among Captives of the Allies.

In a way the association's work for prisoners in the allied countries was far easier than it was in the Central Powers, for the treatment of the prisoners was incredibly good. One Y representative in France wrote that though many of the officers in charge of prisoners had been wounded or gassed, or their families and friends had suffered the horrors of invasion, these officers, when he expressed surprise at their kindness, said quite simply that "they treat the prisoners as they would like to be treated themselves."

But in another way its work among the prisoners of the Central Powers was more difficult than that for the Allies, for the latter were at least friends among themselves, and that was not the case with the former. The Germans, whether of Germany or Austria, despised the subject races—Bohemians, Poles, and the rest—neglected them in the distribution of delicacies, such as oranges and the like, when these were sent, and treated them with a contempt which was increased by the arrogance of the officer class. The loneliness of these men was pitiable. When a Czech-speaking secretary, for instance, visited a camp of them for the first time, they fairly wept. "We thought everybody had forgotten us," they said.

Such work as this is still carried on in England, France, and Italy, for in none of these countries have the prisoners been repatriated. It was carried on in Russia till the Brest-Litovsk treaty constituted them potential and many of them actual enemy soldiers, when the Y men turned to other activities, of which more will be said later. And it is needless to say that there are Y activities in the internment camps for enemy aliens in this country.

The association also maintained a service in Switzerland. It had a number of huts for the benefit of allied interned officers and soldiers there. Some of these were at famous health resorts, for the men who were suffering incipient tuberculosis or were otherwise physically broken down. The Y also maintained a bureau at Berne, which was in active communication with our boys who were prisoners in Germany or Austria. This bureau kept them in touch with their friends, and got through to them sporting goods, footballs, baseball gear and the like, and did whatever could be done to ameliorate their condition.

Of course there was religious work in every prison camp, but the attitude of the association was wholly nonsectarian. The Y huts were used for Catholic or Greek services precisely as the huts in army camps in this country were used for Catholic or Jewish services, and the directors procured sacramental wafers and wine for the Catholic priests and candles and wine for the Greek priests as willingly as they found Protestant pastors for the German Protestants imprisoned in France. Indeed, the association has shown so little sectarian narrowness that it has even, by arrangement with Cardinal Bourne, been helping to defray the expenses of the Catholic services in the prison camps in England.

Foyers Du Soldat.

Before the war there were in existence in the large garrison towns in France, like Vincennes, small soldiers' clubs with the title "Foyers du Soldat," (the home of the soldier,) where they could read and write and have quiet, and which were free from any religious influence. After the declaration of war M. Emmanuel Sautter, a Parisian interested in soldiers, borrowed the title, to which nobody laid claim, and established two of these huts back of the front lines in the French Army with money placed at his disposal for the purpose by Dr. Mott. The work was shortly brought to the attention of the Y. M. C. A., which proceeded to finance it.

The work grew, though not very rapidly at first because of the suspicious attitude of the French Army authorities. They could not be sure as to just what was the nature of the work which the Foyer du Soldat was performing—whether it was religious or political propaganda or what. In the course of time they came to realize that the Foyers du Soldat were simply huts where their soldiers were welcome when they came back from the front, where they were warmed after weeks of shivering in the trenches, where they were supplied with hot drinks, with cinema shows, with concerts, with other amusements; where those who liked to be quiet could sit in peace and toast their feet about the stove, and where, above everything else, the warmth and kindliness of the reception which they met restored their shaken morale and where the "cafard" (as the condition of depression which came in the trenches was called) was almost invariably driven away.

During the Winter of 1916-17 the work, which was increasingly financed by the American Association, and in part manned by them, grew to more than sixty foyers. By this time the French Army recognized fully the value of the work, and during the Summer of 1917 it applied to the Y. M. C. A. of this country to increase it indefinitely. It urged the association to create at the earliest possible moment new foyers to bring the number to more than 1,450. The Government provided barracks, furnished with tables, benches, stoves, and lights, and arranged according to the wishes of the association. It gave, free of charge, coal and gasoline or kerosene for heating the barracks. It gave the association facilities to buy supplies from the canteens. It gave transportation free by rail and by automobile for such articles as the association furnished itself, such as books, letter paper, games, and magazines. It also detailed one to four men to aid in keeping each barracks clean and to help in the service.

To procure the number of workers, French or American, necessary to open all these foyers, was impossible, but eleven hundred or more were in operation at the time of the armistice. The one-thousandth foyer opened was in the Verdun fortress.

The work of the association in these foyers brought it in contact with men from all over the world. It actually carried on work for Chinese, Annamites, Senegalese, Malgaches, (from Madagascar,) Moroccans, Algerians, Portuguese, Poles, Italians, Russians, and a host of Africans from the interior of that continent. An article in L'Illustration of Paris gave a list of the languages in which were written books found in the foyer libraries—English, French, Italian, Russian, Portuguese, Polish, Turkish, Annamite, Chinese, Japanese, Tonkinese, Classic Arabic and its dialects, Egyptian, Kybele, Magrahin, Moroccan, Sudanese, Tripolitan, Tunisian, Lake Chad, (Peulh,) Guinea, and Bambara, dialects of the Congo, Gbea, Sfumi, (Bateke.) And the list was probably incomplete.

The work of the Foyers was carried up to the very front trenches, of course, and it was a matter of pride that it was the only organization which held on to the last with the troops after the advance of the Germans over the Chemin des Dames, the directors leaving their huts only after they were under machine gun fire, and following up their poilus on the offensive of July 18, remaining with them through the battle till it ended at the Aisne.

Another work in which the association directors were found valuable was that of training the French in American outdoor sports. The French recognized the value of the physical training in our games and are still developing an American sports program for the poilus. There are in France eight normal schools for training teachers of physical exercises, under the direct supervision of the War Department, and at these schools many of the finest specimens of the youth of France receive their preliminary training as noncommissioned officers and are thereby qualified to assist in the training of the army. In August, 1918, General Cottez asked the Foyer du Soldat if it was possible to furnish an American physical director for each of the eight schools to serve as a technical expert in the instruction of the officers, "moniteurs," and students in American sports. The head of the physical work in France at once undertook to find among the 5,000 Y men there eight with a technical knowledge of our games, possessed of pedagogical instincts and training, and able to speak French well enough to put such a program into operation.

One of the Generals who had been in command on the western front and had seen the work of the Foyers was ordered to command the French forces in Morocco. He requested that the Foyers should supply him with men, and there are now fifty Foyer directors with the French Army in Morocco. There are also several Foyers at Saloniki, with both French and the Greek troops, and one at Corfu.

The Y. M. C. A. activities for the Italian Army did not differ materially from those for the French. When the Y work began in Italy in 1917 there were some 150 "Case del Soldato," which correspond in a general way to the Foyers du Soldat. These were under the direction of Don Giovanni Menozzi, Head Catholic Chaplain of the Italian Army. They carried on a general welfare work for the soldiers, and the association's offer of co-operation in the work was cordially welcomed. Several Italians undertook to work out the details, among them Prince Borghese and Father Genocchi, one of the most distinguished Catholic divines in Italy, who has visited this country several times and is well known here.

The Italian work increased more slowly than the French because of the difficulty of getting workers who spoke Italian. It was impracticable to use Americans of Italian birth on account of the Italian military law which makes all such men subject to military service. However, at the time of the armistice there were some 275 men working in the camps and in huts in cities where there were large concentrations of recruits, like Naples, and where there was great need of decent places for the boys to congregate.

Athletic sports were introduced by the directors as well as hygienic gymnastic exercises for the men recovering from wounds or convalescing from illness. There was also a new field of usefulness for such of the association workers as spoke Italian fluently enough—that of going about the country and delivering speeches to the civilians in order to keep up their morale. No country in Europe, outside of those which have been overrun by the enemy, has been so sorely tried as Italy, and there have been moments of great discouragement, as after the Caporetto disaster, which has been increased by skillful German propaganda. The American Y workers, going about among the people and telling them of the part which America was preparing to take in the war, did much to hearten them. In certain cases they were asked to continue their efforts far beyond the time originally assigned to them.

During the great Piave offensive which ended with the complete rout of the Austrians, the Y directors were under fire the whole time and accompanied the units to which they were attached throughout the advance. The verdict on their courage and devotion was given by the Italian military authorities when, out of thirty-three association men working on that front, thirty were decorated with the Italian war cross.

The Work in Egypt.

The problem in Egypt was different from that presented in Europe. Owing to the attack by the Turkish Army on the Suez Canal, that vital line of communication with India and the East, a large body of troops was concentrated along the canal itself and the Red Sea, while danger of attack from the Senussi, the most fanatical body of Moslems now in existence, and having their headquarters south of Tripoli, compelled the maintenance of a number of scattered garrisons on the western frontier of Egypt, in oases and at points of

How the U. S. Navy Buys Sponges

ONCE upon a time the Government departments at Washington used to buy their sponges by the pound, just as many painters, purchasing agents and garage men still do.

But the Government found by tests that sponges may lose from 30% to 75% of their weight by drying out—and were often "loaded" with salts that cost the packer a few pennies and brought him perhaps $4.00 a pound.

The Government tried to fix a definite per cent to allow for loss of weight, first drying its sponges, soaking out the "dope," if any, and charging off the excess. But the plan caused so much trouble and expense that the Navy and other departments finally "chucked" it and wrote this specification:

"All sponges will be purchased and paid for by piece only" (of specified size).

Simple, isn't it! No more guess-work! Anybody can increase the weight of a bale of sponges, but no one can make a sponge bigger than it is! That's what the largest user of sponges in America has decided.

Under its long-established policy, the House of Rhodes

—guarantees all Colossus sponges absolutely pure
—urges quantity users of sponges to remember that it is impossible to buy sponges safely by weight —recommends the Government's by-the-piece specification as the simplest and safest—cheapest and only satisfactory way to buy —welcomes inquiries and challenges competition under exact, by-the-piece specifications.

Every American Now a World Citizen

"The remarkable events that are being enacted in our day have brought every man, woman and child of the United States into close touch with all other peoples and countries. What is going on in Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy, Canada, Germany, South America can never be a matter of indifference to us again. The Great War has made us Citizens of the World. For this reason I am glad to have association with NELSON'S Great Enterprise WHICH IS HELPING PEOPLE TO WORLD CITIZENSHIP."—Dr. John H. Finley, N. Y. Commissioner of Education.

The War Is Over. The Reconstruction Period Is On

NELSON'S PERPETUAL LOOSE-LEAF ENCYCLOPAEDIA, is the only encyclopaedia which, by means of Nelson's patented loose-leaf binding device, keeps pace with the activities of the modern world; all old fashioned reference works must simply mark time during these greatest years in history.

NELSON'S LOOSE-LEAF has recorded the events of the war as they have occurred. With the same care and accuracy it will follow the tremendous changes that must inevitably come with the conclusion of peace. The war is now history. Nations are being remade. You must keep in step with the world to-day.

NELSON'S PERPETUAL LOOSE-LEAF ENCYCLOPÆDIA & Research Bureau for Special Information THAT BAR AND NUT SOLVED THE PROBLEM

An American Idea—The American Encyclopaedia—Born in America—Made in America—By Americans—For Americans—The Standard Authority for the Whole World

The fact that Nelson's Perpetual Loose-Leaf Encyclopaedia is the standard authority in every quarter of the globe is in itself the highest recommendation. No book which is not thoroughly good could stand the inquisition of hundreds of thousands of readers and continue to sell as Nelson's is selling now.

Its Editorial Staffs are among the unquestioned leaders of the educational world. The Editor-in-Chief is JOHN H. FINLEY, Ph. D., LL.D., Commissioner of Education and President of the University of the State of New York; the Associate Editors are SIR WILLIAM PETERSON, LL.D., K.C.M.G., Principal of McGill University, Montreal, Canada, and SIR EDWARD PARROTT, M.A., LL.D., F.E.I.S., Edinburgh, Scotland. More than 1,000 Educators and Specialists are engaged in making this great work, and in keeping it always fresh and new. So unquestionably high are the names and reputations of these men that the scholarship, the accuracy, and the thoroughness of NELSON'S are assured for all time.

Bound in Twelve Handsome Volumes

The Patented Loose-Leaf Binder makes a volume so practical that by simply turning a nut the pages are loosened, the obsolete pages easily removed, and the new pages substituted. The Publishers issue to subscribers not less than 250 revised pages each six months—in March and October—thereby keeping Nelson's Encyclopaedia always new and abreast of the times.

Nelson's Research Service Bureau

Nelson's Permanent Research Bureau for Scientific Reports, Special Information, and Special Correspondence. It is prepared to answer fully and freely any question, and to supply free any information that Nelson's subscribers may ask on any subject, large or small, old or new. Nelson's Research Service Bureau will furnish the latest information on that subject.

Nelson's Perpetual Loose-Leaf Encyclopaedia Is a Complete College Education in the Home

Nelson's Reading and Study Courses in United States History, Business Economics, Nature Study, Agriculture, and Home Economics, are declared by educational authorities to be equal to a college course and training in each of these departments.

Thus, with the Reading and Study Course on Agriculture used in connection with NELSON'S PERPETUAL LOOSE-LEAF ENCYCLOPAEDIA, a boy can remain on the farm and yet receive all the advantages of a college course in Scientific Farming; with the course in Home Economics a girl may have the services of the leading authorities on household economics without leaving her home; while the Business Economics Course will furnish the professional and business man with a business training superior to that which can be obtained from any of the widely advertised business institutes.

Save Time—Look It Up in Nelson's

DOWN TO DATE, Nelson's Perpetual Loose-Leaf Encyclopaedia gives you all the information contained in other Encylcopaedias and thousands of new subjects not to be found in any other reference work. WHAT Y. M. C. A. HAS DONE strategic importance along the Mediterranean. There were at one time more than two hundred garrisons in Egypt and it was the task of the Y. M. C. A. to make life bearable in them.

A description of one will do for all: About 150 miles west of Alexandria on the shores of the Mediterranean and among the sands of the Libyan desert lies Mersa Metruh. The nearest city is more than 100 miles away, wood costs over $25 a cord, and it costs 15 cents a pint to condense fresh water from sea water, the only water they have to drink or wash in. For the soldier there is nothing visible but the sea before him, the desert around him and above him the pitiless sun. The mail comes only once a week and not always then. No wonder that each successive garrison sinks into a state of dull apathy, and that men go mad from the heat, monotony, and loneliness. That is the state of affairs, with local variations, in a great number of stations in Egypt.

The association has a hut, in the first place, in each station which is large enough to warrant it, and it has a force of men who go about from place to place, taking new stocks of cinema films, mostly comic, and Victrola records, mostly ragtime, to replace those which have become familiar. It is held to the credit of these men, with their films and records, that so few soldiers have gone mad on these outlying stations. At Mersa Metruh, for instance, only one man lost his reason in some two years.

Conditions in the Sudan and on the borders of the Red Sea are even worse for Europeans because of the climate. In the Sudan the day begins at 5 and ends at 8:30 A. M. For the other twenty hours and a half the men have nothing to do—nothing to occupy their minds. The standard of morality is so low in these towns and cities of Egypt where East meets West, and the worst of both is combined, that there is a crying need for a decent place for white men to go. The Y huts supply that need.

There are large numbers of European and Indian troops cantoned about Cairo, and many wounded and convalescent have been brought there and to the neighborhood to recover. The association has opened huts, has athletic training for the convalescents, promotes sporting competitions at the camps, and tries to give the European soldier a chance to lead something like his normal life.

It works not only for European soldiers, but for the Indian Sepoy as well—Sikhs, Gurkas, Bengali, or what not; trained association workers from India live with these men, and serve them not only in the ordinary ways, but by writing their letters for them, by giving them advice in their difficulties, or even by helping them out of serious trouble. For instance, a man will come to a director and say that his land has been taken by some one in the village, and will the director write a petition for him to the Deputy Commissioner? He begins to tell who his father was and generally tells of his whole family—anything but the point in question—so that direct questions have to be put to him to get all the real facts about the case so that his petition can be written. He puts his thumb mark on it, and the commanding officer forwards it. One director knew of half a dozen cases where the men received replies from the District Commissioners that the matter had been attended to and steps had been taken against men who had usurped their lands. The replies would come to these men direct and they would come to the director full of gratitude for his help.

The African work does not stop with the Sudan. The British forces during the campaign in German East Africa were accompanied by association men, and when they and the British discovered the needs of the great multitude of negro porters who carried the baggage and supplies of the army, a call was sent to this country. There are now eight trained negroes from the Southern States working with these porters.

On March to the Red Sea.

When the British forces began their advance from the Red Sea across the Sinai Peninsula, the Y. M. C. A. accompanied them through the desert. At every halting place a Red Triangle outfit would appear, with marquees, equipment, and all the comforts which meant so much to the soldiers in that trying march, when the very water had to be piped along the whole route.

After Palestine was reached, and two months before the beginning of the advance which ended in the capture of Jaffa and Jerusalem, the association was asked by General Headquarters to depart for a time from its principle of keeping the well men well, and to concentrate its strength during the forthcoming push upon taking care of the wounded men as they were brought back along the lines of communication and at casualty clearing station at the front. The difficulties were great, for it was impossible to gauge the number of men who would have to be cared for, while the date of the fight, and consequently the date when the association would be needed, could not be told for military reasons, and nobody could guess where aid would be most needed.

In spite of these difficulties, the association carried out its task. When the first wounded men were carried off the field, they were met at the clearing stations by thirty Y workers with sixty soldiers detailed to assist them, and they were supplied with cocoa, cake, cigarettes, chocolate, and the small comforts which throughout the war have meant almost the difference between life and death to men in their condition. This care followed them through other stations established all down the line, and the best measure of the Y's success is found in the statement of the consulting surgeon that "the Young Men's Christian Association, with its hot cocoa, &c., saved hundreds of lives."

The advance of the British forces in Mesopotamia was accompanied by the Y. M. C. A., first the English organization, and then, when this country went into the war, by a certain number of American workers, who served under the British Red Triangle. The care of the Expeditionary Force began back in India, at Bombay, in Calcutta, wherever the English soldier landed, and followed him to the very front. Indeed, the association was proud of the fact that during the advance through the desert their motors would often push ahead and establish posts, so that when the men of the column came up they would find a cooling drink awaiting them, and a little shelter from the sun. To give an idea of what cooling drinks mean in this climate, it can be said that last July more than 1,000 gallons of cold drinks were served in one day at the base town of Basra alone, and 300 gallons of tea were served in a day by one worker in the trenches.

There were eighty association men working for British and Indian troops from Basra to the front line, and three days after the capture of Bagdad the association was at work in that city. There are also a number of military working centres scattered about India. Of the work of the association men in that part of the world Lord Chelmsford, Viceroy of India, wrote as follows:

"I have the greatest admiration for the work which the Y. M. C. A. is doing. It is work which we must maintain at all costs."

The Commander in Chief wrote that he desired "to say how warmly he appreciated the valuable work performed by the Y. M. C. A. among the troops overseas and in India," and General Marshall, in Bagdad, said of it that "no call has yet been made to which it has not readily responded."

Perhaps the most striking testimony to the value of the association's services is shown by the fact that several large manufacturing concerns in India, after seeing what it did to promote the efficiency of the soldiers, have asked the association to undertake work among their native employes after the war to increase their efficiency in the same way.

At last accounts there were 101 workers in Mesopotamia and 100 separate stations. The American Y. M. C. A. has given generously of its money as well as of its workers for this distant war zone.

In the Turmoil of Russia.

There was active work in the prison camps in Russia at the time of the first revolution, and this work continued through the Kerensky régime. During the latter period, as the United States had gone into the war, a beginning was made also in doing for the Russian soldier what was done for the Frenchman in the Foyers and for the Italian in the Case del Soldato. Permission was obtained from the Kerensky Government to establish huts at the front, and a number of men were sent by the Y. M. C. A. from America for this work, which meanwhile was carried on by such men as were already in Russia and who could be spared for it from the work in the prison camps. At Tashkent, where it was first carried on, it was exceedingly successful, and showed the amenability of the Russian peasant—who, of course, makes up the army—to such influences as the association can exert. The troops in Tashkent with which the association was working were pronounced, after six months of this work, to be the best disciplined soldiers in the Russian Army.

The bulk of the new men sent from this country arrived about the time the Kerensky Government was overthrown and the Bolsheviki came into power. The Russian Army, deprived of all discipline and without officers, simply melted away, each private filling a gunnysack with provisions, slinging his rifle over his back, and calmly going off to the nearest railroad station without asking leave of anybody, for there was nobody in authority of whom to ask leave. As there was no possibility of the Russian Army's continuing in the war, a few of the secretaries returned in order to work on other fronts; but the great majority preferred to stay and help the Russian people, for whom they had contracted a very real affection. These men were scattered all over European Russia and Siberia, from Petrograd to Vladivostok, from Archangel to Tiflis. They composed a body more numerous than our Diplomatic and Consular Corps, Military Mission, Red Cross, and Committee of Public Information combined.

When required by the international situation in September to withdraw from Bolshevist territory, the secretarial forces were concentrated and reinforced in Arctic Russia and in Siberia, where they are serving 400 and 4,000 miles of front, respectively, from hundreds of huts and shuttling freight cars, horse, dog, and reindeer sledges, supplying a canteen service that, according to Consul General Harris, is twenty times cheaper than local prices. Only a few days ago the first word in a year came from two men who had been working in the Caucasus and had been completely cut off. One of them managed to send through the Armenian Relief Commission a dispatch which said, "Elder and I are still carrying on."

When the Czechoslovak Army began its epic journey of 6,000 miles across Russia and Siberia, there were several Y men with it, and they or others have remained with it ever since. They had box cars fitted up as huts, and earned a place in the hearts of the Czechs, by whom they are called "The Uncles from America."

The exchange of prisoners with Germany and Austria brought back thousands of the pitiable Russian wrecks who had lived three years on the border line of starvation. Hospitals were their immediate destination. Free barber shops and entertainment were furnished them, and, most important of all, supplementary food rations of eggs, milk, and nourishing bread.

The American Y workers who have been for any time in Russia believe in Ivan, as the peasant is called, love him, and are anxious to remain and help him. And Ivan wants them, too.

All I have written is the merest outline of what the overseas work of the association has been in the last four years. To sum it up, the association had, at the termination of hostilities, nearly 8,000 men and women, not all Americans, but of various nationalities, engaged in war work in Europe, Asia, and Africa. This is inclusive of the men and women working for our army overseas. The value of their services may be fairly judged by the fact that the authorities of practically every country in which they worked—France, Italy, Egypt, Palestine, India, Russia—have asked them to go on after the war with one or more of the activities in which they have been engaged.

OINTS OF ATTACK ON PROHIBITION

awyer for Brewers Defines the Three Constitutional Grounds on Which Dry Amendment Will Be Assailed

A FEW days ago one of the foremost brewers of the city was quoted as saying that within three years he expected his plant be making beer again. A talk with illiam H. Hirst, attorney for the New ork State Brewers' Association, showed at the liquor interests believe they see good prospect of repealing the recent ohibition amendment.

"The point of attack on the carrying t of the Federal amendment," said Mr. irst, "will be constitutional. There e three main points to be taken up d one or two minor ones. Let me give u the main points first:

"First, was the method of passing the mendment in the houses of Congress cording to the law as given in the onstitution? Two, does the amendment onflict with the police power of the tate as laid down in the Constitution? hree, does the amendment violate the onstitution in giving the Federal Govrnment and the State Government conrrent police power?

"Not the least important attack will made on the passing of the amendent on the first point. Article V. of e Constitution, dealing with the mending of the Constitution, is as folws:

> The Congress, whenever two-thirds f both houses shall deem it necessary, hall propose amendments to this Contitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the sevral States, shall call a convention for roposing amendments, which, in ither case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the everal States, or by conventions in hree-fourths thereof, as the one or he other mode of ratification may be roposed by the Congress; provided hat no amendment which may be ade prior to the year 1808 shall in ny manner affect the first and fourth lauses in the Ninth Section of the irst Article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of qual suffrage in the Senate.

"When the amendment went through ongress it was passed by a two-third te of the members present, but not by two-third vote of all the members of th houses. The contention is made by e men on the other side of the queson that this is legal; that in order to ake an act of legislation legal all that demanded is the presence of what is nsidered a quorum of the members of th houses. I agree with them there. ut this is not an act of legislation. his is an amendment to the national cument of laws and liberties.

"Is or is not an amendment to be condered on the same basis as a law hich may be purely temporary and assed as an exigency to meet a situaon? It seems to me that the former a good deal more serious in content nd requires exactly what the words of e article demand, 'The Congress whenver two-thirds of both Houses shall eem it necessary * * *' The memrs of the houses cannot shirk their sponsibility in such a case. The matr is of sufficient importance for them e present and state definitely on hich side of the fence they stand. If e amendment had been introduced rough the second method of introducon, that is, having two-thirds of the tates make application for it, it would ot have been considered sufficient to ave only two-thirds of those States tensely opposed or intensely in favor f the amendment present the article r Congressional action, omitting those tates indifferent to the question. The nalogy may seem far-fetched, but it n't. An amendment controlling the berties of the people of a nation seems o me to be important enough to require ore consideration than this one reeived.

Scope of Police Power.

"Now for point two: Does the amendent conflict with the police power as id down in the Constitution? The mendment, as it stands today, reads follows:

> Section 1—After one year from the atification of this article, the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.
> Sec. 2—The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
> Sec. 3—This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the Legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

"The right of a State to control its internal affairs and the social life of the people is expressed in Article X. of the amendments: 'The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.' This question of States' rights was of the greatest moment when the Constitution was framed. The article given above assured to the States just that power which the prohibition amendment is taking away. The question came up at the time of the civil war. There was no attempt by President Lincoln to interfere with the jurisdiction or determination of any State on the question of slavery. State sovereignty remained unassailed.

"The national prohibition movement is not so conservative. It is not comparable to a combination of States which is opposing the extension of institutions of other States. It is a proposal to force upon all the States the conception of morality and standard of life and personal habits which some States decide shall be uniform throughout the country. Its realization would change the Constitution from a charter of liberty and inviolable rights to one of oppression and denial of rights, and States decide shall be uniform throughcentrifugal force. In no matter are people so apt to pull in different directions and to oppose each other's interference and restrictions as in their social affairs and private habits.

"In order to bring past history into the light of present events and thus enable us to form judgments and opinions based upon principle and logic and not hysteria and bias, we must go back into history and look into the genesis of our Federal Constitution. The formation of the American system of government started with the distinct understanding and reaffirmation of fundamental rights, privileges, and immunities which could not be taken away, but which remained inviolable in the individual. In order that they might not be lost sight of in the larger compact which had to be formed to establish a Federal system, every gathering or convention which considered that system emphasized the retention to each unit which entered into it the greatest possible amount of control over the internal affairs of that unit, whether it was a trading post, a colony, or a State. The most vital point brought into the discussion at the Constitutional Convention was the protection of the rights of the State against infringement by the Federal Government.

Question of Centralization.

"The convention was dominated in its final conclusion by the desire to grant as little as possible to a central legislative Government consistent with the mutual welfare of the States and to protect and uphold the dignity and autonomy of the separate States. Specific powers were delegated to the Federal Government and denied to the States and other specific powers were reserved unequivocally by the States.

"Through 130 years of growth and development and of bitter and sometimes bloody controversy over the rights of the Federal Government and the rights of the State Government one great fact has stood out prominently. It is this: In no instance has there been an indication or any claim of the most ardent Federalist of the right of trespass upon or curtailment of the police power, which is especially and exclusively left to the State within its own limits. From the aim of our Government, both national and State, from the theory of our Federal Constitution and the intent of its framers, from the motive which inspired the first ten amendments and the interpretation of the fundamental law through more than a century and a quarter, and from the mandates of both the explicit division of rights between the State and Federal sovereignty and the exercise of these rights by the appointed sovereignties, it seems to me that the following conclusions are not beside the mark:

1. The police power does not lie in the twilight zone of doubtful jurisdiction, but is clearly and unquestionably lodged in the separate States and denied to the National Government, and should remain in the States.
2. That the regulation and control of the social habits and private lives of the people within a State fall under and are subject to the police power, and belong to the State absolutely, and cannot be undertaken or interfered with by the National Government in any manner.
3. That there can properly be no jurisdiction in nor legislation by Congress with respect to the sale of alcoholic drinks within the States except as a war measure.
4. That any change in our system of government which takes from the States the regulation of the sale of alcoholic drinks would be in violation of the fundamental principles of the Federal Government, and would encroach upon the police power which was one of the rights and prerogatives plainly and indisputably reserved to the States and always exercised by them, and would constitute a dangerous precedent for further absorption by the National Government of powers which essentially go to make up State sovereignty.
5. That each State, by the exercise of its police power as amplified by the Webb-Kenyon and Reed acts of Congress, has absolute control of the liquor traffic within its confines and may adopt and effectively enforce any degree of prohibition or restriction over the traffic in liquors from an absolute "bone-dry" law to one of license and regulation. It may make the mere possession of a bottle of beer or wine in one's home a crime, or it may give permission to have it under such restrictions and control as will protect the people of the State and preserve their rights.
6. That the Federal Government has never attempted nor should it interfere with the domestic affairs of the States upon whose individual greatness, strength and sovereignty the power and majesty of their combination depend.
7. That the amendment of the Federal Constitution providing for national prohibition strips the State of a most essential part of its police power and deprives this generation and the ones to follow of the right of ever hereafter having a voice in the regulation and control of the internal affairs and social habits of the people of that State and forfeit to other States of the Union the control and regulation of those affairs and habits.
8. It would constitute an act of ultra vires (beyond power of) in so much as it was never intended or dreamed that any combination of States could deprive a State of its sovereignty. President Lincoln said, "No State has a right to secede from the Union without the consent of all the States." In the same manner, no State can be deprived of this sovereignty without the consent of all the States.

"Concurrent" Powers.

"Point three deals with the concurrent police power given to the State and Federal Government. The Anti-Saloon League people injected into the amendment the very confusion of power and conflict of jurisdiction which the Federal Constitution studiously sought to avoid. Up to the present time, this has been avoided. This power of concurrent jurisdiction will lead to one of two things—the amendment will either be made meaningless and a mockery or a conflict of authority will arise in carrying out the excise laws which will be a menace to national unity. Where the Government has proper jurisdiction it derives its authority from powers delegated to it by the States, and its power is exclusive. It necessarily must be.

"The attempted delegation of power back to the States, which is involved in this proposal of concurrent jurisdiction, is contrary to constitutional intent and sanction. This clause is not merely the result of accident or mistake, but it is the inevitable and unavoidable situation which must arise when the Federal Government is given cognizance over a matter which is intrinsically one for exclusive jurisdiction. Where there is a deviation from the doctrine of the correct and proper division of sovereignty between the Federal Government and the State Government and a departure from the correct principle of Constitution making, the clash between the two is inevitable, and when that clash happens we discover that an unconstitutional amendment of the Constitution has been attempted. The escape from such a clash lies only in having each sovereignty attend to those matters which come properly within its scope.

Ex-President Taft's Opinion.

"Ex-President Taft expressed himself as follows on this point in discussing the prohibition amendment:

> The reaching out of the great central powers to brush the doorsteps of local communities, far removed geographically from Washington, will be irritating in such States and communities, and will be a strain upon the bond of the national Union. It will produce variation in the enforcement of the law. There will be loose administration in spots all over the United States and a politically inclined national Administration will be strongly tempted to acquiesce in such condition. Elections will continuously turn on the rigid or languid execution of the liquor law, as they now do in the prohibition States. The ever present issue will confuse and prevent clear and clean cut popular decisions on the most important national questions and the politics of the nation will be demoralized as the politics of States have been through this cause.
> The theory that the National Government can enforce any law will yield to stubborn circumstances and a Federal law will become as much a subject of contempt and ridicule in some parts of the nation as laws of this kind have been in some States. * * *

"Another point that might here be mentioned along with the discussion on the constitutionality of the amendment is the one of referendum. Among the States whose Legislatures have voted favorably on the amendment there are some whose constitutions provide for referendum. I believe there are fourteen or fifteen of these. If it can be proved that the vote of the Legislatures in these States is void before it is referred to popular vote, then the required number of ratifying States has of course not yet been reached.

"The Constitution provides that the amendment is to be submitted to the Legislatures of the States. But what is meant by the 'Legislatures' in those States working under the referendum law? If it means the person chosen to sit in the elected body called the Legislature, then there need be no referendum on the question. That was the only kind of Legislature known at the time the Constitution was adopted in 1787. But if the framers of the Constitution meant by the word Legislature the legislative machinery of the States, then ratification is not complete until in addition to the action of the elected legislators, it is also submitted to the vote of the people and approved by them. There is eminent legal authority for the belief that in States having referendum the amendment must be submitted to the vote of the people before it can be finally disposed of. This undoubtedly is so with respect to Ohio, where the Constitution provides for a referendum on proposed Federal amendments.

"That the national prohibition amendment is in reality not an amendment, but simply a piece of legislation which the States have been asked to concur in under the guise of an amendment, is another point which the lawyers expect to bring out. The amendment, however, cannot be accepted as an act of legislation, because it was not approved by the President and, further, because it is not sanctioned by the present constitutional powers of Congress.

"If it were possible at all under our system of government to transfer the control and regulation of manufacture, sale, and use of liquor to the Federal Government, it could only be accomplished by amending Section 8 of Article I. of the Constitution, by adding to the powers already expressly vested in Congress the power to control and regulate or prohibit the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors. This would set up a permanent process for dealing with the question, but it would avoid the danger and mischief of setting up a permanent decision. Congress would then have been clothed with the power to deal with the liquor question as public interest and public sentiment might require from time to time. Should that public interest and public sentiment call for a change or modification it would be within the powers of Congress to make whatever change or modification the prevailing public opinion of the time called for. Under the amendment Congress will be unable to make any change or modification, whatever may be the demands of expediency, justice, or public opinion.

"It may be interesting to note that some of the brewers expect to fight the enforcement of the amendment on the point of what constitutes an 'intoxicating' liquor. In some prohibition territory it is held that any beverage containing less than 2 per cent. of alcohol is not intoxicating. If that point will be upheld in a test case, then the brewers will be affected in no wise.

"These are the most important points on which the constitutionality of the amendment can be combated. What most probably will happen is this: The liquor interests will wait until the law goes into effect, meanwhile organizing themselves into a strong working body. Therein, by the way, lay the strength of the Anti-Saloon League. It wasn't that the nation as a whole was for prohibition, but that those who were, were organized. Just as soon as the law goes into effect there will no doubt arise a misdemeanor or several or hundreds of misdemeanors.

"The organized force behind the anti-prohibition movement will use one of these as a test case and take it up to the Supreme Court for decision. Once it is decided that the amendment is unconstitutional it becomes void.

"There is of course another way of overruling the amendment. That is by enacting another amendment which would counteract this one. But the difficulty there is almost unsurpassable. It takes three-quarters of the Legislatures of all the States in the Union to tack an amendment on to the Constitution. Thirteen prohibition States, however small, can prevent such an article from becoming law. Thirteen organized States on the anti-prohibition side could have done the same. But there again we come to the fact that the prohibition States were organized and the others were not."

Cocoanut Oil Fine For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Many soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is better than soaps or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

SHOE CONSERVATION

W. H. Kelley, a lumber salesman, of Omaha, found Neolin Soles so tough and durable that one pair of soles served on a second pair of uppers after the first pair of uppers had worn out in ten months of hard walking.

And he says, "Those same soles will stand another ten months of constant daily wear."

This is unusual service even for Neolin Soles but Mr. Kelley's experience should indicate to you a method of cutting down those rising shoe bills you have to meet. Simply make sure the new shoes you buy are Neolin-soled and have worn shoes repaired with these soles which are scientifically made to be comfortable, waterproof and exceedingly long-wearing. They are made by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio, who also make Wingfoot Heels, guaranteed to outwear any other heels.

ARMY DEMOBILIZATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Arguments of Those Who Contend Former Should Be on an Industrial, Not Military, Basis—Serious Conditions Foreseen

LACK of a comprehensive national policy in the transition of the country from a war to a peace basis is beginning to make itself sharply felt at Washington. Stories of unemployment conditions crop up from all over the country, rapidly increasing, while, at the same time, the demobilization of our troops moves rapidly forward.

In the War Department the policy of military demobilization is being followed. In the Department of Labor, which has the responsibility for finding places for discharged soldiers and war workers, an opposite opinion is held as to demobilization—that it should have been conceived and carried out on an industrial basis; that men should be released as jobs were found for them instead of by military units.

In Congress members call for an even more expeditious demobilization than the War Department is conducting. "Send the boys home," they cry, while at the same time legislation is being urged on Congress by other members—such as the bill to validate war contracts so that suspended factories may turn to peace production, the Lane bill to reclaim land for farms for soldiers and the bill for extensive public improvements—all to supply work for the unemployed, increased daily in number by the newly discharged soldiers.

These conflicting issues illustrate the lack of a co-ordinated Government plan. There is no central body to whom appeal can be made to resolve differences that may arise, though there are numerous separate agencies working hard and effectively in their area to bridge the industrial gap between war and peace.

Between the needs of the industries for men and the demobilization of the soldiers there is no guiding connection. Boilermakers, for instance, are needed in excess of the supply in fourteen States, according to the United States Employment Service, but military demobilization does not take cognizance of this fact; in the units discharged in the face of such a demand there may be few or no boilermakers; in those still held in service, there may be many. The effect of having one skilled position unfilled in the trades radiates in several directions, keeping other men out of work, it is asserted by advocates of industrial demobilization. Some of the highly skilled key positions, it is estimated by experts, control the employment of fifteen other workmen dependent on their activity. A shortage of carpenters, for example, would soon limit the number of men whom the planing mills could employ, the number of bricklayers, electric wirers, plumbers and other related trades.

Central Board Needed.

There has been delay in getting through Congress validating war contracts which, in the rush to win the war, were not legally executed. Close to $2,000,000,000 of manufacturers' capital is tied up by this, and in practically every city where there is large unemployment some of it is due to the failure to pass a law enabling the necessary adjustments between the Government and the contractors to be made.

Other questions equally urgent are now raising again in Washington the demand for the appointment of some administrative board or commission, composed of a few men of the highest ability and standing, by which the various activities of Federal agencies of readjustment from war to peace can be co-ordinated. We are entering peace unprepared, it is asserted, and just as we found, after fumbling at the beginning of war, that we had to build special machinery to mobilize effectively, so we are going to find that we need special machinery if we are to pass with the least loss from war to peace.

At the time of the armistice we had built this machinery for war to a state of efficiency, following, in the main, outlines of organization which England had found successful, but to which we gave different names. England, immediately after the signing of the armistice, turned her war machinery into peace channels, in accordance with plans already worked out by the Minister of Reconstruction. It was supposed that a reconstruction or readjustment commission would be appointed here, and, in the days just following the armistice, Bernard M. Baruch, Chairman of the War Industries Board, was freely mentioned at Washington as the head of the body. A committee of experts worked out in detail a plan of organization to have charge of the adjustment from war conditions to peace. In this the War Industries Board, not only because of its authority over the industries, but also because of its prestige with the business world—which, it was thought, would be of great influence after its authority ended with the proclamation of peace—was to be the centre. The needs of the industries, calculated in proportion to their basic importance in the return to peace-time production, the supply of labor required by such a schedule, and the discharge of the soldiers, were to be co-ordinated, according to this plan. But, instead of attempting to use the War Industries Board in the transition period, the announcement came that it was to be disbanded, and several of its bureaus to be transferred to other Government bodies. That made a big hole in the Government's war-making machinery, and, from that time, each of the other special war-making organizations has shown a lessened activity. The decision that the War Industries Board was for war-making only had its effect on the others. It was taken as a clear indication of policy.

"The Federal Government, which but yesterday was running everything, is today close to refusing to have anything to do with anything," said the head of one of the special departments. "Our venture in 'let-her-go' readjustment has come too suddenly after the close control that was exercised before the armistice. Before the special war-making organizations degenerate further they should be linked together as machinery for the transition to peace conditions. If some better co-ordination is not brought about here we are likely to see other difficulties added to the growing one of unemployment."

Special Transition Organs.

Within the departments themselves energy and initiative are being shown in grappling with the problems. Two special peace transition organs have been built up in the War Department. One has charge of the adjustment of war contracts, and much preparatory work has been done, so that when Congress passes the Validation bill less time will be lost in settling the claims of contractors. It is estimated that there was $17,000,000 in war orders on the books of industrial concerns when the armistice was signed, a large part of which has been canceled.

Joseph H. Defrees, Chairman of the War Service Executive Committee of American Industries, the Central Committee of the 400 War Service Committees organized during the war under the direction of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which is co-operating with the War Department in bringing about a settlement of the contracts, said in Washington the other day, with regard to the importance of passing the pending legislation:

"Speed in the payment of industries which did war work is absolutely vital in order that the industries may have the use of their capital and thus employ the labor of the country and assist in preventing a bread line. Already the newspapers are carrying stories on unemployment, and it is clear that the situation will grow worse unless the industries that have done the war work can receive payment from the Government so that they may immediately go back to peace production."

The other special peace transition organ in the War Department is the Division of Sales, in charge of the disposal of surplus property. After the civil war surplus property was dumped on the market. Contractors buying at low prices made fortunes and at the same time manufacturers and dealers lost heavily. The surplus supplies now held by the Government are vastly more than at the end of the civil war, probably totaling several billions of dollars. If turned loose on the market they would cause serious disturbance in prices and production. In order to obviate this C. W. Hare, Director of Sales, has worked out a plan of co-operation with manufacturers and dealers in the disposal of supplies. An effort will be made to dispose of such supplies in what are called preferential markets,—as in Government and semi-Government departments such as the Post Office, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and to foreign Governments. A big deal with Ecuador is now under consideration. Arrangements are being made to sell to the Russian Bureau of the War Trade Board millions of dollars' worth of clothing to be sent to Russia.

Where surplus supplies cannot be distributed through preferential markets representatives of the manufacturers concerned are consulted and agreements are reached as to the course to be taken. Here is a typical one made with the machine tool industry:

> First—The inventory of all machine tools and equipment which is being made will be expedited to the greatest extent.
> Second—As soon as it is known that a quantity of tools is available for disposal the manufacturers of these tools will be given opportunity to purchase them at a price and on terms of settlement which will be satisfactory to all concerned.
> Third—In case it is impossible for the manufacturer to purchase his product outright, an effort will be made to arrange for marketing of the product by the manufacturer in an equitable manner, securing for the Government and the manufacturer alike the best possible terms.
> Fourth—In case both these methods of disposition fail, the material will be offered for sale to the general public in a manner prescribed by law.

In some of these agreements the manufacturer binds himself to market half of his own product and half of that made for the Government. He is thus enabled to keep his factory going and to release the Government property without serious interference with his trade.

The Department of Labor, on its side, is striving to handle the problem of unemployment. This, through lack of any really effective co-ordination among the departments, reduces itself to attempting to find jobs for discharged soldiers and war workers. Any means of approaching the problem from the standpoint of regulating the flow of men into the labor market in connection with the demand is absent. The United States Employment Service, with representatives in each army camp and agencies in every city and town in the country, has charge of this work. The Council of National Defense now devotes itself to aiding the Department of Labor in finding jobs for soldiers.

Co-ordinated Work Abroad.

Both England and France are now carrying out carefully planned reconstruction programs, each under a Minister of Reconstruction. Everything that was made for war, every plant, and the workers were studied in advance for conversion into peace activity. These countries were in the war before us, and while we were concentrating our efforts in bringing our full power into the war they were at work preparing for peace in order to recuperate from the heavy drain on them.

In England under the Minister of Reconstruction the Committee of Reconstruction consisted of fifteen main committees. Among the more important were those on Demobilization, Trade Development, Finance, Raw Materials, Coal and Power, Housing, Labor and Employment, Disposal of Stores, Agriculture, and Industrial Research. Under the main committees there were more than seventy-five sub-committees, commissions, and boards. The ablest men that could be found were called to serve on the committees.

In the immediate problems of readjustment to peace conditions in England, the starting up of peace industries in the shortest possible time and avoiding unemployment on a large scale were, of course, interrelated, but a special study and program was required for each. Industries were classified with regard to their basic importance, for example, coal and steel. Workmen were also classified, those in the army and those in the industries. For the army the principle of industrial demobilization was adopted; that is, the men were to be released from service as jobs were available for them and on a basis of priorities as to national industrial needs.

The order established for the army was:

First to be released, those whose civil jobs were necessary to expedite the work of demobilization; second, pivotal men, or those without whom the bulk of men to be re-employed in civil life could not get work opportunity; third, men who had definite jobs waiting for them, to be let go in the order of their jobs; fourth, men who had no definite jobs waiting for them but whose work in an industry was likely to expedite demobilization; fifth, other men in order of importance of civil jobs; sixth, the skeleton units.

In the system determined upon, married men received preference over single men and long-service over short-service men. Each soldier, in addition to "Book 64," which gave his trade in civil life, was asked to fill out a form as to prospects for employment—to state whether his pre-war employer had promised to keep his job open for him and whether he desired to return it. These cards were sent through verification, and, when checked affirmatively, the soldier in question became a "slip man," subject to release in the specified order.

All this represents the handling of vast detail. Some British soldiers have shown impatience over delay in release from the army, but, in the main aim of avoiding the risks that attend extensive unemployment, the British authorities are sticking to their program, with appeals to the soldiers to co-operate in what is deemed necessary for the welfare of all.

Up to a few days ago the demobilization of the United States forces totalled 915,5[illegible]3 officers and men. The total for the British Army in the same period was 624,6[illegible]9. For a time our releases were twice as fast as the British.

Our boys are given full discharge not more than 350 miles from their homes. Usually the discharge takes place near a large city, to which the men, young and with the reins of restraint slackened, flock in large numbers. Many of them, it has been found, spend their money and turn up in a few days "broke" and looking for work. This swells unemployment, and, in order to obviate such practices, the War Department has recently introduced a plan whereby discharged men purchase their tickets for home before leaving the camps. The Government pays the discharged soldiers' railroad fare home.

In England a scheme has been designed to deliver the soldiers to their homes. The men to be released from service are first sent from the camp to what is called a dispersal station, the one nearest their homes. Each man then gets a railroad ticket to his home, but instead of his discharge he gets a twenty-eight-day furlough. This enables him, if his job is not open, or he becomes dissatisfied, to return to the army and thus keep off the unemployment lists.

It is the contention of our War Department that a scheme of industrial demobilization, if practicable at all under present conditions in this country, would have delayed all demobilization beyond reason. If, however, the trend to unemployment should increase there will arise, it is asserted, a demand for the adoption of some policy which will release those who have jobs to go to, and hold, for the time being at least, those who have no prospect of early employment.

Losses in Our Forces Here and Abroad

DURING the war the total number of deaths from disease in the United States Army in this country was 32,165. Final figures of deaths in home camps since the armistice are obtainable, but, by the available statistics in connection with the total deaths in the expeditionary forces as announced yesterday, give an approximate total of losses in the entire American armed forces, including the marines. The figures follow:

Killed in action abroad	30,498
Died of wounds abroad	12,899
Died of accident in A. E. F.	2,626
Died of disease abroad	18,927
Lost at sea	738
Deaths in Marine Corps	2,129
Total	67,811
Deaths from disease in United States	32,165
Grand total	99,976

The figures include both officers and men.

ROOSEVELT FOUNTAIN PLANNED

THE plan for a Roosevelt Memorial Bird Fountain, launched last week by the National Association of Audubon Societies and affiliated sportsmen's clubs and outdoor societies, has met an enthusiastic response, according to T. Gilbert Pearson, Secretary.

"It is our plan," said Mr. Pearson yesterday, "to erect a fountain of great beauty, which may not only be used by thirsty wild birds, but in its architectural design will speak of the wild life in the open of which Colonel Roosevelt was so fond. It should become one of America's landmarks. Some of the leading sculptors have already expressed their desire to submit plans."

At the request of the Audubon Society the policy of Government bird reservations was established by President Roosevelt, and before he left office thirty-eight great bird sanctuaries had been created. As is well known, he encouraged bird students and natural history writers in many ways, contributed to scientific explorations, and was President of the Long Island Bird Club.

Among those who have accepted positions on the National Committee formed to back the fountain movement are John Burroughs, C. William Beebe, George Shiras 3d, Oscar S. Straus, George L. Hubbell, President of the Campfire Club of America; John B. Burnham, President of the American Game Protective Association; Edmund Seymour, President of the American Bison Society, and Charles Lathrop Pack, President of the American Forestry Association. The Treasurer is Dr. Jonathan Dwight, 1,974 Broadway.

WITH THE ORCHESTRAS

MUSIC in America is apparently to show marked effects of the war-time residence here of many representatives of the modern art of Europe, whose influence, if continued, should produce as permanent change as did the influx of German exiles after the revolution of 1848. French music has found its champions now. Plans are making by a committee of public-spirited women, including Mrs. Newbold Le Roy Edgar, Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, and Mrs. Charles Guggenheimer, to present on April 11 an orchestral concert along the newer lines, conducted by Edgar Varese.

M. Varese was born in Paris, where he early attracted the attention of Debussy and Romain Rolland, as in Germany he did of Strauss and Mahler. He was hardly more than a boy when he organized in Paris the Choeur de l'Université Populaire and gave a series of concerts. At the outbreak of war Varese joined his regiment, but was invalided home after double pneumonia, and sent to America to recuperate. His only appearance in New York hitherto was as conductor of the Berlioz "Requiem," performed last year at the Hippodrome in memory of the allied dead in the war.

Music from War Movies.

A novelty in today's program of the Symphony Society in Aeolian Hall is Alfred Casella's "Films," or "War Pictures," which will have their first American hearing. The young Italian composer, it is said, was inspired to write these four short orchestral pieces by moving pictures of the war. He thus calls his works: I. "Belgium: Heavy German Artillery Passing Through." II. "France: Before the Ruins of the Cathedral of Rheims." III. "Alsace: The Wooden Cross." IV. "Italy: A Man-of-War Cruising in the Adriatic."

Casella has composed such other works as "Italia," a rhapsody for orchestra; two symphonies, song cycles, chamber music, and piano pieces. Born at Turin July 25, 18[illegible], he was visiting conductor with the Colonne and Lamoureux orchestras in Paris, and is now living in Rome, composing and teaching.

Cesar Franck's "Psyche."

In Franck's symphonic poem, "Psyche," which the Boston Symphony men w play in Carnegie Hall next Thurs evening, Mr. Rabaud will make kn a work which he believes has been duly neglected. Even with the omis of the choral portions, which he de not important, it remains "a large s ject, largely treated." Only one or of the four movements has been pla in this country, notably when d'In conducted them.

Both d'Indy, to whom it was dedica and Derepas praised the music, and found a "fundamentally Christian sp in the pagan theme." To Franck, Psy represented the soul of humanity; divine love. "Psyche, uplifted by spiration, seeks to pierce the myst and falls broken to the earth. But is finally redeemed in a glorious uni

The next New York concert of Philadelphia Orchestra will take pl on Feb. 11, when Olga Samaroff, wife of Conductor Stokowski, will be solo pianist in the Brahms B flat c certo. In the same program is the th "Leonore" overture of Beethoven.

"That German compositions are ag coming into their own," says a se official note, "or, as some folk conte a great deal more than should righ be theirs so shortly after the termin tion of the war, is a fact for which praise or blame, as popular feeling ha pens to run, must rest with our orche tras more than with individual artist

THE PROBLEM OF AMERICANIZATION

Federal Plans to Assimilate Foreigners and Illiterates Supported by Governors—1,575 Publications in Alien Tongues When We Entered War

GOVERNORS FAVOR ABSORBING ALIENS

N response to a request for views on methods of Americanizing foreigners and illiterates, Governors of States have sent to the Sunday s the comment printed herewith:

Governor J. P. Goodrich of Indiana.

No work during the coming decade ll be more essential to our national lfare than the work of nationalizing millions of foreign-born inhabitants. America is to fulfill its destiny the rit of our ideals and our traditions st be instilled into every American rt.

This can only be done by creating an erican atmosphere in communities de up of foreigners. All must be ght to speak and to think in our com- n language, which is the language of Declaration of Independence.

Indiana is ready at all times to co-op- te in any feasible movement devoted the nationalization of our people.

Governor Henry J. Allen of Kansas.

ecause Kansas approaches a condi- of 100 per cent. Americanism, the ation in this State as regards the of American teaching and training ng the foreign population does not me the serious phase that it does in er Commonwealths. The percentage illiteracy in Kansas is also much w the average of American States.

ut in strongly indorsing the proposed ion by Congress, which is urged by retary Lane, to Americanize the for- millions in our midst and to wipe illiteracy among our people, I merely ak the sentiment of Kansas. I am rtily for this program and hope that will be adopted without delay. The four years have shown the folly as ll as the futility of allowing America receive millions of people from for- n countries without actually assimi- ng them. All persons to whom is ex- ded the privilege of American citi- ship should come to speak our lan- ge, think our thoughts, believe in our titutions, and render loyalty to our alone.

ernor Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts.

From Inaugural Address.

Nor is it sufficient to limit our efforts youth. There are among us many re- t arrivals, who are entitled to our sideration and assistance. This is to large extent a problem of the National vernment. It is intricate, delicate, not yet fully understood. It is main- a problem in showing to all residents e that there is an interest in their lfare, a desire to protect them from position, a respect for their own na- nal spirit, and an effort to have them that spirit in appreciating our own zenship and supporting our own in- tutions. Many being on our shores never arrive at America. Our coun- must be carried to them. This is one the first States to recognize this duty try to meet it. Provision should be de to assist in teaching all up to ddle age to speak, read, and write our language, and come in that way to an understanding of our institutions.

Governor William C. Sproul of Pennsylvania.

In Pennsylvania the question of interesting the foreign-born population in American institutions and giving them an understanding of our laws and ideals is a particularly important one. On account of our large mining and industrial enterprises in this State the percentage of foreign population is very large; in fact, I am told that fully 20 per cent. of all of the immigrants arriving on our shores settle finally in Pennsylvania. Fortunately, however, this population is pretty well scattered here, and while there are many communities with a very large foreign-born population there are very few in which that element predominates. Then there seems to be something about the atmosphere in Pennsylvania which makes our foreign-born residents seek to mix with and affiliate with the natives. A very large proportion of them, as compared with the proportion in other States, have acquired their own homes and have secured thereby a real stake in the community.

We have been gratefully surprised during the last two years to find, too, in the hearts of our foreign-born an unexpected depth of patriotism and a keen appreciation of the principles involved in the war. They have shown a real eagerness to prove their devotion to their adopted country; their sons have gone in great numbers into the army and navy, and they have organized among themselves and bought Government bonds in surprising amounts.

During the next few years we are laying plans to bring these people even more closely into a complete understanding with us by encouraging them to acquire homes and arranging our popular educational courses to reach them particularly. A great deal is being done here through private initiative in this direction; the State is alert to the situation and is bringing these people to understand that our authorities are their friends and will protect them from those who woul prey upon their unfamiliarity and inexperience with our customs and practices. We shall certainly welcome such a movement as Secretary Lane has outlined to supplement our efforts. Nothing that can be done in a practical way will be of greater service in the present time or be more effective as an antidote against the social poison which has been introduced here by malign agitators from abroad.

Governor W. L. Harding of Iowa.

From Inaugural Address.

I know there are those who argue that it is narrow to insist that, as a condition precedent to citizenship, the official language of the country be mastered and used, or that the youth in his very beginning be required to gain his first impression of the country and society in the language of the country. The answer to all such contenders is: "Your first love is not America, it is some other country, or it may be greed for gold. It is one or both."

The strength of our nation lies in the understanding and love our people have of its ideals and traditions. Handicapped, indeed, for citizenship and growth is that individual who has not read the Declaration of Independence and Lincoln's Gettysburg address in the language of their authorship. Sad, indeed, was the plight of the country when, engaged in a great world war, it found it necessary to stop in its preparation of men to fight to teach them to speak and even to read and understand the language of the country well enough so that they could be drilled and take or give orders. It is not wholly the fault of the men. As a nation we opened the door and left it. We should have stood by in those other days and said:

"This is America. If you come to be one of us learn and use our language, acquaint yourselves with our traditions and ideals, become a part of our life and thought, and then we will make you a citizen of our country. If you are not here to be one of us you may tarry for a time, but not in a colony, and then you must go back."

Governor James Withycombe of Oregon.

From Inaugural Address.

I also recommend that this Legislature study the provisions of an educational bill now pending in Congress, known as Senate Bill 4,987. This measure contemplates State co-operation in banishing illiteracy and in spreading the benefits of Americanization among foreign born.

The administration of the selective service law revealed a distressingly large number of illiterates in the United States. Under the 1917 draft alone 700,000 men registered by marking X's for their names. It is a pleasure for me to remark that a recent Federal report announced Oregon's rank among the forty-eight States as third in the scale of literacy, only two States—Iowa and Nebraska—ranking above her. Nevertheless, the last Federal census discredited Oregon with 10,504 illiterates, and the fact that a new official ranking will be determined in the 1920 census, which will remain fixed for a full decade, suggests the importance of the subject.

Because most illiterates are beyond the school age the problem is admittedly difficult. A number of Oregon Judges now require that men appearing before them for examination looking toward citizenship submit their wives also for educational test and this custom will no doubt lead to beneficial results in reaching those adults inclined to illiteracy. At the inspiration of the State Department of Education the teachers of the State are being encouraged to aid all residents who seek assistance in special subjects of education. Their generosity in this direction should be recognized.

Governor D. W. Davis of Idaho.

From Inaugural Address.

Not the least important of the problems facing us at this period is the training of our foreign immigrants in the duties of citizenship, and the compulsory educaton of all persons who cannot read, write, and speak the English language. We as a State ought to show our gratitude for the sacrifices of our brave sons and honor the heroes, dead and living, by exalting the principles for which they strove. We need to lay a new emphasis on Americanism. Let English be the speech of all assemblies and the primary language in all our schools. Let there be a more complete knowledge of our own history and of our own system of government. Let there be further stressing of the privileges and obligations of citizenship. Let there be an intelligent movement for the Americanization of all who come here to make a home.

For those who forgot their debt to this country and favored our foes openly or covertly, let them know by the weight of ostracism that such treachery is neither condoned nor forgotten. Let all of our educational institutions, all our churches, all our fraternal orders teach the message of the new day which our brave heroes have brought us, that service to humanity is man's first obligation.

Governor Marcus H. Holcomb of Connecticut.

From Inaugural Address.

From the very beginning of our history, Connecticut has yielded to no State in its emphasis upon the importance of popular education. It has made us what we are. No State can be great or good except as the masses of its people are virtuous and industrious and intelligent. The critical times which we face demand more than ever good schools for the masses of the rising generation. Other States and other countries are aroused. We must not only do our part but we must lead.

If we want the next generation to be 100 per cent. American in the fullest sense of Americanism, we must make our schools 100 per cent. efficient for that purpose now. To that end we must bring into our schools as teachers the best and ablest of our young women and young men. That means at bottom increased financial support and an organization best calculated to insure the taxpayer value received for money devoted to education.

Governor John G. Townsend, Jr., of Delaware.

From Inaugural Address.

Reconstruction means that every foreign-born resident of this State shall be offered opportunity to learn our language and thereby be better able to become a part of our citizenship. Further, I would present for your consideration the advisability of some compulsory law providing that all those residents of Delaware who enjoy the privileges and protection accorded shall learn to speak the language of our people.

Practically all the States are now considering Americanization. To this end it would seem practical that representatives of the several adjoining States' Legislatures hold a conference, and by discussion and agreement make uniform the legislation affecting non-English speaking residents.

Governor Sidney J. Catts of Florida.

I have your letter of the 13th, asking that I write a paragraph or two on the proposed action by Congress to Americanize our millions of foreign and illiterate inhabitants.

I desire to say that there is no more important question before the American people than this, and I am in favor of closing the doors of immigration to all foreign people until we have Americanized the foreign element we have now. The only trouble with America was, at the beginning of the war, we had so many Germans un-Americanized within our gates that the Governors of the States had a serious time making Americans out of them or forcing them to shut up and stop their clamor against America.

Should we have gone to war with Italy, Russia, Austria, or any of the South European nations, the same would have been true, and America would have been full of spies. I also believe that all these foreign people should be forced to remain in America as long as an American child has to remain here before they can vote, which is twenty-one years; in this time they are thoroughly Americanized.

I may be extreme in my views in regard to this matter, but we would save ourselves from many pitfalls and dangers if we do not receive the European nations through our gates of immigration too fast.

Governor Smith and Americanization.

Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York has assured the State Board of Regents that he will support their efforts to Americanize foreigners and illiterates, estimated at 600,000. Chester S. Lord, acting Chancellor of the board, thus outlined its plans:

> We are soon to have a conference of American educators and specialists and will have a heart to heart discussion as to how best to meet our educational needs.
> We should have a day of that council devoted entirely to the best methods of the study of history; what history we should teach in various periods of the school year; how to interest the student, especially how to persuade him to study, which is necessary to the student's success.
> We should have a similar discussion on every department in our public schools.
> Adult illiteracy is spreading fast. We have planned to attack that. We propose to divide the State into centres.
> We should establish a teachers' institute in every centre which should teach teachers how to approach the foreigners on the subject of education. We would establish classrooms in the schools, in the factories, anywhere, by propaganda and by publicity. We would endeavor to interest the residents of the State in this Americanization.

Governor Smith said in reply:

"There are two vital points of immediately pressing importance in the great question known as 'Americanization.' One of these problems is to teach every illiterate in the State to read and write. The second relates to the living conditions and necessities of the great mass of the people of the State.

"I shall be willing to join with the Board of Regents in any reasonable movement which may operate to obliterate adult illiteracy from the State.

"I should like the Board of Regents to work out a plan by which the State may proceed at once to correct this condition, which is a standing menace to the proper development of the economic and social interests of the State."

AMERICANIZATION A COMMUNITY PROBLEM

By RALPH PHILIP BOAS.

THE problem of Americanization involves not so much a matter of principles as a matter of methods and a knowledge of con- ions. It is not difficult to state what ericanization means. To assimilate ples of foreign birth into American , to make newcomers loyal to demo- tic institutions, to prevent alien com- nities in our cities, in general to ate a truly national spirit—every one gnizes the problem. Social critics fond of declaring emphatically that e must" do a thousand and one ngs, but in the meantime the Ameri- nization of immigrants seems no near- than it was before the war. Indeed, a few cases, it is further away than er, for the aliens who came to America fore the war, humbly grateful for a uge, are now filled with the national -consciousness of the homeland, and often more chauvinistic than their ntrymen at home. They have never lly known America, but they have n long enough away to idealize their tive countries. America is to them ly workaday reality; their homelands m which they were glad to escape are their ideal.

Like all other human beings, immi- nts fall into many classes. In the t place there are the adaptable im- grants of all groups. These recog- e their opportunities, take advantage the freedom of America, quickly rise education and resources, and form of the most valuable elements in the ional amalgam. The second group is posed of irreconcilables from many ions, usually men of considerable tal attainments, embittered by ggle and poverty in the land of their h, disappointed in the economic com- ition of this country. There are al- s men who do not possess the pa- e to work hard and faithfully for ess, and are hence forced to remain r. Their tastes are naturally those ich men; their environment is that poor men. Possessing none of the lifications for business success, they lude that the organization of society adically wrong. Agitators and mal- tents once, they are revolutionaries , having a more bitter hatred for erica than for the countries whence y came, for America is their land of ppointed dreams. With both these Americanization has little to do. The first will take care of itself; the second is the active foe of Americanization. Determined to permit no one else disappointment, this second class does its best to create and foster suspicion and hatred. Owning nothing, rebellious on principle, it works mischief among those whose poverty make them food for revolution, or those whose idealism makes them easy prey for social theories.

There are two other classes: the immigrant of little education or mental attainment, who furnishes the heavy unskilled labor of the country, dull, inert, and slow to respond to anything but a material impulse, and the immigrant who is genuinely interested in America and wants to make America his home. Both these classes are good material for Americanization. If properly approached, they can be mingled with the community and helped to take at least as much share in the responsibilities of American life as the native born of equal mental ability. But the work requires knowledge, skill, tact, and the proper environment.

In the first place the influence of the malcontents ought not to be allowed to offset the efforts of Americanization. The agitator without a country has every advantage. He knows the language of the immigrants, he lives among them, and he burns with the zeal of his doctrine. While the Americanization worker is laboring with limited funds, with the handicap of a foreign language, and with the indifference of his fellow-Americans, the agitator gives his whole time with reckless disregard of poverty or punishment and with a knowledge of every weak point in the immigrants' psychology. It is well to talk of education, but education is more than a few well-intentioned classes in English plus a few lectures. Education is that which affects a man at every point, and for each point at which the Americanization worker touches the immigrant, the agitator has twenty points of contact.

Americanization can be fully successful only as it recognizes that education is a matter of environment. If unemployment is widespread, Americanization is impotent. The jobless man will not love and understand America. If the cost of living places the elementary comforts of life beyond the reach of the worker of mediocre ability he cannot feel that America deserves his gratitude and sacrifice. An architect recently said, "The solution of the housing problem is three-quarters of Americanization." He is very nearly right. A prominent social worker says, "Give him (the immigrant) a chance to make an honest living, pay him a living wage, present to him an opportunity for the so much talked about right of the pursuit of happiness, keep him away from the selfish politician, help him to discriminate between his friend and his enemy, protect him from the evil influences of corrupt democracy, exhibit the American virtues as conspicuously as you exhibit its shortcomings and faults, and it will not be difficult to get an expression of true patriotism, based upon a deep-rooted appreciation of all the blessings that the immigrant can acquire in this country." He is right. The Americanization worker should remember that the immigrant has the same limited outlook as the ordinary American "man on the street." The advantages of our political democracy mean little to the man whose outlook is primarily economic. Congress is hundreds of miles away, but the factory is round the corner. The Supreme Court is in Washington, but the policeman is in the immigrant's block. The Americanization worker should remember that the immigrant is a human being whose emotions and affections are far more deeply rooted than his judgment and reason. Hence he should do his best to see that the conditions surrounding the immigrant are such as will draw him into the best in America.

One mistake the Americanization worker is likely to make. Hating, and justly hating, the hyphenate political allegiance which caused so much trouble in our country, he tries to drive out of the immigrant's mind all loyalty to and love for the cultural and domestic traditions of his native land. Nothing does more harm to genuine Americanization than lack of respect for a man's inherited social background. So long as a man is willing to live within the law and help to further our ideas of political democracy, it matters little if corduroy trousers and spaghetti suit him better than woolen trousers and apple pie. The Greek, for instance, prizes highly the traditions of ancient Greece. Let him prize them—they make him a better American. In art, letters, and non-political thought a little hyphenatism breeds fertility.

It is obvious that the problem is not one for individuals or societies—it is an affair of the community, and as education in the broadest sense of that term it ought to be handled by public educational agencies. Such agencies, while not always perhaps thoroughly efficient, are at least quite free from bias. Best of all, they command the complete confidence of the immigrant. They are at present actively and most successfully engaged in Americanizing his children. Let public agencies extend their efforts into the field of community education. Let them set out by public community centres and by factory classes organized under public direction to teach the immigrant English and a knowledge of American institutions. Where the plan of Americanization by community effort, with the practical co-operation of public educational agencies, has been tried it has proved successful. The immigrant comes to know the English-speaking community, and they come to know him. Indeed, one of the best elements in this plan is the fact that native-born Americans are roused to a reaffirmation of their Americanism in a dynamic, virile, and practical way. If such community education is worked out on a large scale there is every reason to hope for a new basis of reciprocal confidence and respect.

FOREIGN-LANGUAGE PAPERS IN AMERICA

FIGURES showing the circulation throughout the United States of foreign-language papers have just been compiled by the Bureau of Education in the Department of the Interior in its work in Americanization.

There were approximately 33,000,000 people in the country in 1910 who were either born abroad or under foreign home conditions and neighborhood environment. In all there are 38 different language groups in the United States, supporting publications which have a total circulation approximated at 10,982,000.

The foreign-language press consists of 1,575 publications, printed in 38 tongues. From this number, however, must be deducted many German-language papers which have been suspended or suppressed during the war, the total of which is doubtful. Prior to the suppression of German papers the number of publications in that language amounted to 483. The next in order was the Italian, with 190 publications. In the number of subscriptions the German papers headed the list with 3,000,000.

The Jewish newspapers stand third in number, but second in the aggregate number of subscribers. There are 156 Jewish publications, with a circulation of 1,500,000.

The Polish population numbers approximately 1,500,000, and the ninety-seven Polish papers have a circulation of 850,000.

The Scandinavian groups bulk large. There are approximately 600,000 persons in each group of Swedes, Norwegians, and Danes, the former being mostly in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, and New York, while the others are found mostly in Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Illinois. There are seventy-seven publications in the Swedish language, with a circulation of 700,000, and sixty in the Norwegian-Danish language, with a circulation of 446,000.

The circulation of papers in each group reaches, in most cases something over three-quarters of the population of the group. An anomaly appears in the case of the Spanish press, where a circulation of 250,000 is divided among as many as eighty-seven papers. This is explained by the fact that Mexicans and American business men are also among the readers of Spanish papers.

Other racial groups which have a press in their languages are the Albanians, Arabians, Armenians, Assyrians, Bohemians, Bulgarians, Chinese, Croatians, Dutch, Finnish, Greeks, Japanese, Lithuanians, Magyars, Belgians, Portuguese, Rumanians, Russians, Serbians, Slovaks, Slovenians, Swiss, Turks, and Ukrainians.

SURVEY OF METHODS OF AMERICANIZATION

FOR more than two years "Americanization" has been a word familiarly and frequently on our lips. Now comes the Carnegie Corporation to make an exhaustive survey of the field and the achievement of Americanization work, and to lay a basis for permanent assimilation of the foreign born.

The corporation has appropriated a large sum of money to carry out the investigation and to make recommendations for the future, based on knowledge both of what has been and what ought to be done. A staff of experts is at work now, and the reports and conclusions will be ready before the end of the present year.

Meanwhile no suggestion is allowed to issue from the workers' offices. No one knows what the investigators are going to recommend in any field of their survey. But what may well astonish the public is the number of fields which are being examined, the enormous amount of ground that is covered, in the understanding of the Carnegie Corporation, by the word "Americanization." What is being investigated is nothing less than the immigrant's whole life, as it is affected by his living in America.

"We are studying," said Allen T. Burns, who is in charge of the survey, "all the vital experiences of the immigrant, what wins him, and what alienates him. The important thing for us to find out is what does win him. For many years work has been going on that has not called itself Americanization, but has tended none the less to that specific end—such work as that concerned with the improvement of housing conditions, for example. All that work is included in our inquiry."

The field of "Americanziation" has been mapped out in ten divisions, with a specialist in charge of each, and a staff of field workers in every division. The divisions and their chiefs are:

Schooling of the Immigrant—Frank V. Thompson, Superintendent of Schools, Boston, Mass.; Press and Theatre—Robert E. Park, Professor of Sociology, University of Chicago; Adjustment of Homes and Family Life—S. P. Breckenridge, Assistant Professor of Household Administration, University of Chicago; Legal Protection and Correction—Kate Holladay Claghorn, Instructor in Immigration and Statistics, New York School of Philanthropy; Health Standards and Care—Michael M. Davis, Jr., Director, Boston Dispensary; Naturalization and Political Life—John P. Gavit, editorial staff, Harper & Bros., New York; Industrial and Economic Amalgamation—William M. Leiserson, Professor of Political Science, Toledo University; Treatment of Immigrant Heritages—Herbert A. Miller, Professor of Sociology, Oberlin College, and Robert E. Park, Professor of Sociology, University of Chicago; Neighborhood Agencies and Organization—John Daniels, the Carnegie Corporation, New York; Rural Developments—P. A. Speek, head of Russian Section, Library of Congress.

As an auxiliary, there is a Division of Information, under the direction of C. C. Williamson, Chief of the Economics Division of the New York Public Library.

Colonel Roosevelt was a member of the special Advisory Council which is working with Mr. Burns in the conduct and oversight of the inquiry. The other members are John Graham Brooks of Cambridge, John M. Glenn, Director of the Russell Sage Foundation, and John A. Voll, President of the National Glass Bottle Blowers' Association.

Methods to be Used.

In its own summary of the purposes of the survey, the Carnegie Corporation explains:

> Our country has suddenly realized the need for uniting all her people in common aims and efforts for the general welfare. Various agencies have arisen in the past twenty-five years, and other and older influences are potent in fusing the foreign with the native born into national solidarity. Many of these have done useful work; it may be possible that others need to be added. In any case, the present time seems fitted for an examination of these various agencies and processes, their operation, their success, and their aims and usefulness for the future.
> For these reasons the Carnegie Corporation of New York has undertaken to furnish the money for a study of the existing methods by which Americanization is being fostered. The method of the study will be throughout comparative and constructive. The purpose is to learn what methods in each of the fields under consideration are effective in the welding process. Typical communities will be selected in different sections of the country which illustrate the working of various methods.
> Such comparisons will yield facts and statistics which indicate the effectiveness of the different methods. On this basis an appraisement will be attempted of the different policies, and the most useful ones or combinations will be pointed out.
> The schooling of immigrants illustrates the reason for this whole study. Teaching English and civics to immigrants is the most commonly recognized Americanization activity. Comparison of the methods and subject matter of instruction in different immigrant centres has never been made. Such a comparison should yield valuable suggestions for improvement of this important phase of Americanization activity.
> Americanization is the uniting of new with native-born Americans in fuller common understanding and appreciation, to secure by means of self-government the highest welfare of all. Such Americanization should perpetuate no unchangeable political, domestic, and economic régime delivered once for all to the fathers, but a growing and broadening national life, inclusive of the best wherever found. With all our rich heritages, Americanism will develop best through a mutual giving and taking of contributions from both newer and older Americans in the interest of the common weal. This study will follow such an understanding of Americanization.

"I think that the question of the immigrant's heritages is the most acute both to him and to us," said Mr. Burns. "It is also, next to the specific problem of the school, the question to which the public is at the present moment most alive. How shall we treat the cultural heritages of the immigrant, the political ideals that he has brought with him, his historic interests and traditions, his social customs, language, and literature? Some say that we should have him discard them altogether. Others believe that all these cultural heritages are too valuable for us to ignore. These point out the benefit that our country has derived from the Italians' music, for example, and the influence it has had upon our opera.

"Then there is the matter of political and historic ideals. Shall we throw these into the discard or shall we use them? If we use them, how can we do it best? Many of these are splendid ideals. On the other hand, if they are not good, they have still to be dealt with, and we must find the best way of doing that."

In connection with the question of political ideals, Mr. Burns recalled the banners in a recent Czechoslovak parade in Cleveland, among the legends on which were:

> We are Americans through and through by the spirit of our own nation.
> Americans, do not be discouraged; we have been fighting these tyrants for three hundred years.

Question of Language.

"One of the most delicate questions is whether schools shall be allowed to use a foreign language as a teaching medium. We must find out all that is being done on this point, and the reason for various kinds of action. Is it best to prohibit the use of a foreign language for all public purposes, or is there a better way?

"Take the question of the foreign-language press; that is plainly a factor of either Americanization or alienation. There are, for example, two German papers in Chicago which show the extremes. One is a thoroughly Prussian, autocratic German paper; the other has for years been telling its readers that the German people must some day rise up and fight the Kaiser. These two papers in the same city show how wide a gamut the foreign-language press runs.

"In Minnesota, to mention another interesting instance, there is a newspaper published in the Swedish language, not because its readers cannot speak and read English—they can and do—but because they want that paper to circulate back home in Sweden; it is explaining to at least one part of one European country what life here is like, and is helping that part of Europe to understand America better. Our place is to try to estimate the usefulness or the undesirability of all these different shades of foreign-language papers. We must take everything into consideration, and study its relation to the fusion or the separation of the immigrant.

"The library question comes in here, too. Some people think that no books in foreign languages should be on library shelves; others say that the better way is to get the immigrant to use the library, by hook or by crook, and make it a factor in his assimilation. We are not yet ready to make any suggestions public, but we are investigating all such questions.

"The crux of the language problem is this: We must of course find means to teach the immigrant our language, but what about his? A continuing democracy must have a common medium of intercourse, but we must deal in some way with the language the foreigner brings with him. We must deal with all his heritages. And his national aspirations, of which I spoke a little while ago—shall we smother, neglect, ignore them, or find ways of using them to make the immigrant understand allegiance to our country and become a better citizen in the United States?

"So much, briefly, for the question of heritages. Another important matter is that of land. Most of our immigrants are peasants, born with a love of the land, and with all the peasant's primeval land hunger. The land problem is basic in its effect upon their whole attitude to the United States. As a matter of fact, many of these immigrants will decide, by the time they begin to get old, that they do not want the bit of land they first dreamed of after all; in other words, not so many people will actually want the land as will want to know that they can get it. But it is important that those who want it shall be able to get it, and that those who think they are going to want it shall be able to feel sure that they can get it, too, when the time comes.

"We find little general consideration of this problem in the minds of the public at large, but we do find a wide variety of practices in regard to it. We have found it treated in ways that exploit the immigrant and in ways that establish him. What we are studying is the dual problem of how to make the land accessible to the immigrant and how to enable him to live on it.

"An allied problem is that of immigrant housing. A great deal of excellent Americanization work has been done through providing better housing conditions for immigrants. The California Immigrant and Housing Commission is probably the foremost attempt here to deal explicitly with housing and general health conditions in the immigrant's life. We are studying, too, the matter of food and clothing, co-operative stores, installment plans, all those matters that come within the scope of the immigrant's adjustment.

"There is the question of teaching the second-generation girls—the daughters of foreign-born families—the principles of home nursing, so that they can deal with sickness and its prevention among their own people. That sounds simple, but directly we get into it we find that the Italians consider an Italian woman completely out of her sphere if she attempts anything like that. An American nurse? All right! But an Italian woman doing that sort of work, never! Now, the question is whether that condition offsets the advantage of the young woman's being able to speak the language. What gives the better net results? That is a type of our study.

Political Experience.

"The political background of the immigrant's life is also important, of course, as is the whole question of legal protection in his life. After all, the way the immigrant gets his lasting impression of American Government and institutions is not by what he is taught in words, but by what he experiences. Take the matter of legal protection—he comes up against our laws in the persons of the policemen on the beat, the tenement house inspector, the City Magistrates, the office of the License Commissioner. Through these he gets his impressions as to whether our Government is humane and reasonable. We are investigating, therefore, such matters as city and county courts and what special provisions they make for the immigrant.

"His direct political life is closely related to this. The immigrant's political experience is much more important in his assimilation or non-assimilation—his attitude toward our Government—than the methods by which he is inducted into American citizenship, important as the latter undoubtedly is. What does his vote mean? Is it really a way of giving him a say in Government, or is it only another autocracy in the form of boss rule? What is his experience with the political organization of his community?

"We find, of course, all varieties among the immigrants themselves, from the men who know and care nothing whatever about their vote and political life, to those who think their votes don't count. Naturally, the latter state of mind is the most dangerous. One of our workers went into a co-operative organization not long ago and asked a young woman there how it was managed. 'Oh,' she said, 'Every one here has as much say as every one else!' Well, if the immigrant does not feel that in his political life, he lays it up against our form of Government. We are examining the way immigrants are treated politically, how they handle themselves, whether they are getting real democracy or boss rule.

"The economic and industrial side of the immigrant's life is believed by many people to be the most important of all," Mr. Burns continued. "It is so close to every phase of his existence; many people say that as that is, so is his whole life. I do not feel that this is absolutely the case, but certainly it is fundamental. The immigrant comes here to better himself, his fortunes. Undoubtedly his success or failure must influence his feeling toward the country.

"We are not, however, attempting an absolute economic study; what we are doing is to compare the economic and industrial life of the immigrant to that of the native-born American. Is he treated the same in the matter of wages, hours, protection of all kinds, hiring and firing, personal consideration, admission to unions, facilities for public employment agencies, &c.? Various phases of industrial relationships come under this inquiry.

"It is interesting to us that we find both employers and unions so anxious to co-operate. Both want to know how best to assimilate the immigrant. Some unions have been wrecked by their inability to do just that. The employer, on the other hand, wants, naturally, to know how to get a fair return for his wages. He has seen that the problem of labor turnover is greater with the immigrant than with any one else, and he is wideawake now to the situation.

"A significant question here is that of difference in wages and permanence of position if a man speaks English. This is a typical and practical inquiry, and it is easy to see what a strong argument it makes for the whole schooling of the immigrant if a plea of that sort can be got out of the immigrant's industrial life.

"That brings us to the broad matter of the immigrant's schooling. We must study the various methods used both for teaching him and for getting him to accept teaching—which is a different matter. How shall we hold him? What kind of teachers does he need? How should the classes be organized—are they best with a mixture of races or only one race in a class? How can we get the most efficient teachers? What methods of teaching are best, and how can teaching be properly dramatized and made interesting? These are a few questions to be asked.

"More is being deliberately done for the Americanization of the immigrant in this field of schooling than in any other," Mr. Burns remarked, "but of course much is yet to be done, and one finds curious blindness even in this day.

"Recently, in answer to the question of what he was doing for immigrants, a school superintendent replied: 'We are not doing anything for immigrants. Of course, we are not. American schools are not for immigrants. American schools are for Americans.'

"So you see there is still something to be done, even in this field."

"But wherever we go we find interest in the great problems of Americanization," Mr. Burns added. "The war was the most effective agency for Americanization ever applied in the United States. It now remains to make proposals for as effective assimilation of the foreign-born in time of peace. The United States, awakened to the necessity of fusing the immigrant, must not lose the momentum from the war and must at once find adequate substitute methods and motives."

PLAYS AND PLAYERS ON THE FEBRUARY STAGE

First Aid By Mail

By JOHN CORBIN.

THIS department has been rescued from calamity, from a realization by day of the most hideous of nightmares. Some time or other, obviously, there must come a week without a new play, and coupled with it a mood utterly destitute of ideas with regard to any old play—a mood in which it is impossible to effect a dislocation of the typewriter keyboard, however feeble. Then this Sunday sermon, two columns of it, must appear something like this: dhiatensor pwfulcmy, |' "!;?%@ zxk gbvqj v—()@¶: There are some folk, perhaps, to whom an article thus composed would appear preferable to dramatic criticism. Assuredly it would possess a rare simplicity and straightforwardness, a truly notable absence of ostentation or pose. And, indeed, why should one continue in the struggle to dislocate the keyboard? Dhiatensor pwfulcmy, .|' "!;?%$,zxk gbvqj-v—()@¶: Nobody's feelings are hurt; there is no exposure of any one's vacuity of mind. And yet the possibility of two columns of this sort of thing haunts one like those dreams of appearing at the opera clad in one-half of a pajama suit, eked out by a smile which vainly attempts to register self-assurance, or, at worst, a blithe unconsciousness.

This week there has been no new play. But—Deus pascit corvos! Correspondents have sprung up on every side who are agitated by and who agitate problems of the drama. Bread cast upon the water has returned, and if it sometimes returns as stones, it is obviously better to die of lapidation than to be crushed under a nightmare that gallops by day.

Acting in "The Marquis di Priola."

DAVID POTTER of Washington writes "to submit—not very humbly!"—that "The Marquis de Priola" is "a remarkable play, a play such as is produced not more than a few times in a lustrum" and that it is "acted by a company of a professional skill and a personal charm and good breeding not seen more than a few times during a decade." This fact the New York papers "do not adequately express." Even THE TIMES, which is addressed as the least heinous offender, succeeded only in producing a review which was "miniaturist."

As to Mr. Ditrichstein's performance in the title part Mr. Potter is silent, content that enough has been said, "and so truly said" in praise of it. He confines himself to the work of the ladies who portrayed Priola's victims:

> There are at least three times during the presentation when the acting approaches true greatness. One is in the second act: the surrender of Mme. de Valleroi—Miss Jane Grey in propria persona—is provoked by, offered to, and refused by the diabolic Marquis! Never was a woman's unutterable humiliation better depicted than it is by Miss Grey in this scene. The whole truly terrible situation is handled with perfect taste, with perfect restraint. The maddening and crushing insult received by Mme. de Valleroi is not reflected—as it might be in the hands of an actress of less calibre than Miss Grey—by any corresponding dementia of gesture. Furious rage and hate, undying shame and humiliation, are revealed in almost the same gesture—the exaltation of the one counterbalancing the exaltation of the other to the perfect restraint of both. Then hate and shame are followed by a third emotion—relief. And this relief is not on account of her escape from passion, but on account of her escape from the satanic malignancy of that passion.
> Says the Marquis—I speak from memory—"You will remember that I have not touched even the tips of your fingers." And to this she retorts with consuming irony, with consuming relief: "Oh! I admit that you are a hero!" The words indeed are Henri Lavedan's, but the art is Miss Grey's! I know Miss Grey's methods only as one may know them from "in front"; but I do not guess as to what she here expresses—I am positive. She expresses stark relief—following stark anger and stark shame. This, indeed, is a consummate touch of the actor's art.
> The second of the points I have in mind is handled by Miss Katharine Emmet. In the third act, the Marquis de Priola persuades, or almost persuades, the iron-willed Mme. Savieres to love him. One of the fearsome delights of this play is that one never can know—perhaps Dr. Savieres's wife herself never can know!—whether or not her surrender is real, or is really designed to trap the Marquis for the benefit of the hidden Mme. Le Chesne. I fancy that many a day of Bible reading, many a night of weeping, would not scourge from her soul the consciousness of potential sinning aroused in her by the Marquis's kiss. I do not know how this thing could have been better done.
> Then follows very swiftly the third of the great moments of the play. After witnessing this scene, Mme. Le Chesne will to me always be Miss Lily Cahill and Miss Lily Cahill always Mme. Le Chesne. Miss Cahill's acting in this scene is pre-eminent for its power of conviction—it is as fine a study in this direction as is the effort of the most accomplished statesman. Yet it yields nothing to other persons in the play in respect of the charm of womanhood.
> Before this scene, the passion of the one-time wife of the Marquis has proved her to be as fascinated and as helpless before her pursuer as a bird before a snake. So well has this been portrayed that one cannot hope she will escape the snarer. Before the persecuted wife emerges from her hiding place to find her former husband holding another woman in his arms, one fears that she will never convince the Marquis of her loathing so long overdue him—loathing that shall convince him of his one and overwhelming defeat. But the instant of Mme. Le Chesne's entrance is the instant of entire conviction. Suddenly, miraculously, she loathes the man—and expresses it so convincingly that the Marquis is in effect driven to his end by his realization of her loathing. One draws a free breath to believe that Mme. Le Chesne is made free—by Miss Cahill. Here, again, the condominium of actress and playwright is perfect.

High as this praise is, it seems quite justified. The ordinary American reproduction of French plays is utterly lacking in the true Parisian atmosphere and—what is infinitely more important—lacking in the character values of its original. Here for once is a production which realizes the intrinsic import of all parts—or of all but one—and which thus preserves unimpaired the essential import of the piece as a whole. That scant justice was done to the fact in the first night reports of the production is one of the incidents of newspaper criticism. In order to describe any performance adequately, it is necessary to evoke not only the character represented but the series of situations in which it moves. To do this briefly is impossible; and with the first edition already rumbling on the presses the critical vocabulary somehow pies. Apparently it is impossible to do more than distribute certain shopworn adjectives as a Sunday school principal distributes much-thumbed good conduct checks, a sufficient collection of which admits the unfortunate possessor to the annual picnic.

A Hero "Bloody But Unbowed."

WRITING in last Sunday's Tribune, Heywood Broun pillories certain of his colleagues for saying that the Marquis de Priola is ultimately "defeated in whatever he possesses of mind and heart." Who the offenders may be I cannot say. When Mr. Broun pillories Dr. Frank Crane as a dispenser of sentimental treacle and intellectual flapdoodle, he tacks the culprit's name in large letters beneath the stocks; but he is more tender of the feelings of his confrères. In the present case, this is perhaps fortunate, for justice has apparently erred. Mr. Broun's point is that Priola "went down sneering and unbroken," and was, therefore, not "defeated." This surely is a very quaint use of language. For "defeated" and "broken" are far from being synonyms. Heroes have been "defeated" since time and the theatre began; but if any of them has abjectly taken the count his case does not now occur to me. An "unbroken" spirit is as essential a trait in the central figure of tragedy as is the "defeat" of his will to live. When Henley proclaimed that his head was "bloody but unbowed," he spoke for all the tribe of heroes. In Priola the will to live centred in his personal charm and in the prowess of his race as seducers; "whatever he possessed of mind and heart" centred in his hope that his son would admire him and "carry on" as he had done. His fate was to linger in life a paralytic and blinded, attended only by the boy who has learned to abhor him and all his ways. Surely, that is defeat, however cynically and unbrokenly it is accepted.

"The Myth of Repertory."

EXCEPTION is taken by Mr. S. Streizheff to the statement that "the true repertory theatre has never been possible, even on the Continent, without a liberal subvention," and the case of a Russian provincial town of some 70,000 population is cited as characteristic of every fair-sized town of Russia under the Czars.

> People take themselves and the drama quite seriously in their bourgeoning youth. On the one hand, our theatre gave us plays like "The Sunken Bell" or "Hannele" of Gerhardt Hauptmann, plays of Sudermann, D'Annunzio, Ibsen, and Björnson, and, on the other hand, "Two Orphans," "The Prince and the Pauper," the favorite "Uriel Acosta," and numerous French melodramas. Between these extremes came plays of Gorky, Andreiev, Chekhov, and of such peculiarly Russian authors as Ostrovsky, Gogol, Griboyedov, Prince Sumbatov, &c., with numerous additions of new plays from Germany, Austria, and the Scandinavian countries. And while the majority of plays were not new, the performances of them were not at all what we call here "revivals," for such a funereal appellation suggests death, and to the Russians of the Czars all is living that deals or once dealt with life in the fashion of those above mentioned playwrights.
> One entrepreneur in my home town started the season once with a number of plays of Ostrovsky, to the neglect of moderns. When appealed to by your humble servant for more diversified dramatic fare, he explained his action by a desire to give every actor in his company an opportunity to introduce and display himself and his talents. He knew the theatrical value of Ostrovsky's characters, for, though rough hewn, they are remarkably true to the life of Russia in the 60's and 70's, and on the stage stand out like giants. No pecuniary motive in this case, as you can readily see. Yet with these methods of management the man held the theatre for two full seasons and at the same time operated a theatre in a town some 500 miles away, and was quite prosperous.
> On the average each play was produced three or four times during one season, lasting from September until Lent. There were some sensational successes, such as Gorky's "At the Bottom," and this was produced some nine or ten times during the season of its completion and release by the author. Prices of admission were from 25 cents and on certain nights from 17 cents up (including tax). Need I speak of the hardships of Government censorship when many plays could not be produced at all, and some enterprising managers had to exert their utmost and assure the Powers That Be of their political safe-and-saneness to be permitted the production of plays like Ibsen's "Dr. Stockman—The Enemy of the People," or Hauptmann's "The Weavers" or his "Hannele," or something even more innocuous.
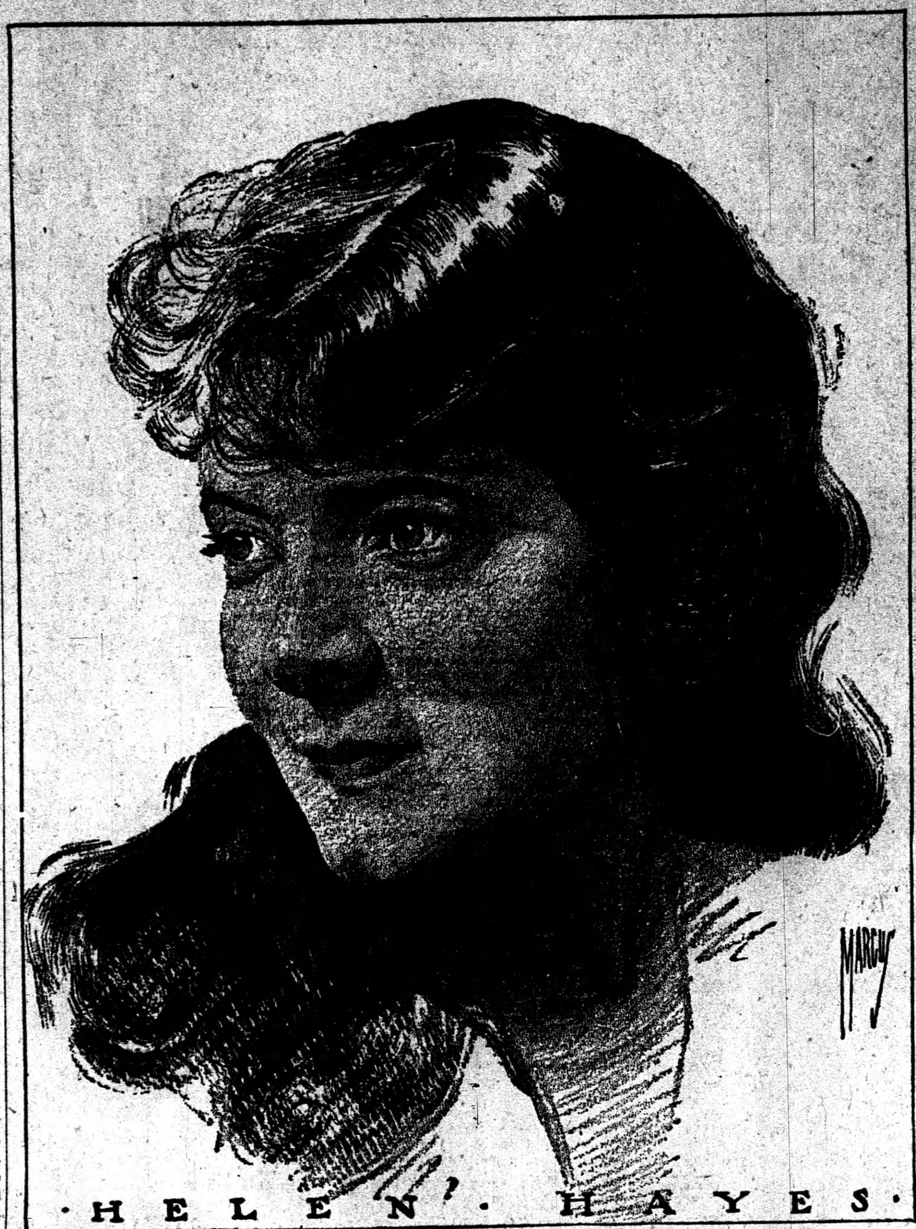
> I dread the time when Russia becomes a prosperous, well-settled republic, for then we may have there stalking through the land "The Myth of Repertory," and on the boards long runs and "stars" set in a mediocre frame of half-fasts.

Interesting as this letter is, does it not refute its own argument? An organization that lasts only two years can scarcely be considered a "true repertory theatre." It cannot even be called a permanent stock company. And such as it was Mr. Stiezheff recognizes that it must disappear before the development of the railway and the general organization of Russian life under the conditions prevailing in Western Europe and in the United States. No, the stock company is obsolete, and will probably remain so; while the true repertory theatre, in Russia as elsewhere, (with the possible exception of the Art Theatre of Moscow and Reinhardt's in Berlin,) is impossible without liberal subvention. In English-speaking countries, certainly, it has always been and bids fair to remain a myth.



Undoubtedly One of the Most Promising Young Players Which the Current Season Has Yet Revealed. She Appears in But a Single Scene in Barrie's "Dear Brutus"—as Margaret, the Might-Have-Been Daughter of Dearth.

THE WEEK'S PLAYS

AGAIN the mills of the managers are grinding, and the result this week will be five new offerings and a revival. Of the quintet of new attractions, two are frankly musical and a third is adorned with song here and there.

THE VELVET LADY—Tomorrow night at the New Amsterdam Theatre.

"A Full House," that well-known farce of Fred Jackson's, is the basis of this musical play—supplied with a score by Victor Herbert and made over for the purpose by Henry Blossom. Georgia O'Ramey, back in these parts after her "Leave It to Jane" success, has the leading comedy rôle, that of the bibulous maid whom May Vokes first impersonated. Others in the cast will be Ernest Torrence, Ray Raymond, Marie Flynn, Alfred Gerrard, Minerva Coverdale, Eddie Dowling, Jed Prouty, Eleanor Gordon, Fay Marbe, and Eda Von Buelow.

THREE DUNSANY PLAYS—Tomorrow night at the Punch and Judy Theatre.

Stuart Walker, in the course of presenting his varied portmanteau repertory, will revive a trio of Dunsany plays tomorrow night, continuing them, according to the present plan, for two weeks. They will be "The Gods of the Mountain," "The Golden Doom," and "King Argimenes and the Unknown Warrior." Mr. Walker's "The Very Naked Boy" will also be on the bill.

L'AMI FRITZ—Tomorrow night at the Theatre du Vieux Colombier.

The weekly offering of the French company is a comedy, once familiar in these parts by reason of its conversion into a Mascagni opera. Director Copeau will head the cast.

MIS' NELLY OF N'ORLEANS—Tuesday night at Henry Miller's Theatre.

Mrs. Fiske is the star of this play, a comedy of New Orleans of a generation or two ago. To quote the prospectus, "The subject of Mrs. Fiske's new comedy is the American belle, that beauty of a past generation who needed no legislative action to substantiate her absolute political and social sway, but who reigned by virtue of her intellectual as well as physical beauty."

Laurence Eyre, author of "The Things That Count," produced here four or five seasons ago, is the playwright in the case, and Cohan and Harris the producers. In the star's support will be seen Hamilton Revelle, Georges Renavent, Frederick Burt, Irene Haisman, Zola Talma, Eva Benton, Doris Moore, and Joseph Dunn.

"Just Around the Corner" brings back Marie Cahill, who has not played in these parts for many a moon. The play is a comedy by George V. Hobart and Herbert Hall Winslow, and it is dotted with songs here and there for the star. The scene is a rural town.

In the cast, in addition to Miss Cahill, will be George MacQuarrie, Eugene Blair, Marie Bryar, Clara Mackin, Lulu McGuire, Wallace Owen, Percy Pembroke, Wilson Reynolds, Margaret Hoffman, Roy Briant, and others.

GOOD MORNING, JUDGE—Thursday night at the Shubert Theatre.

This is Sir Arthur Pinero's twenty-year-old farce, "The Magistrate," made into a musical play by a trio of Londoners—Frederick Thompson, Lionel Monckton, and Howard Talbot. In London it has been more than popular, being now in its second year at the Apollo, where it is called "The Boy."

In the cast will be Mollie King, George Hassell, Charles King, Margaret Dale, Grace Daniels, Harold Crane, Edward Martindel, Shep Camp, Nellie King, Robert Vivian, Alfred Hesse, Betty Pierce, and numerous others.

HOBOHEMIA—Saturday night at the Greenwich Village Theatre.

With the production of "Hobohemia" the Greenwich Village reverts to its original directors—to wit, Frank Conroy and his associates. Emphasis, however, is laid upon the fact that an endeavor will be made, for the rest of the season, to operate the Greenwich as a "regular" theatre rather than as the home of productions peculiarly identified with the village.

The opening play, "Hobohemia," is the work of Sinclair Lewis, and is a dramatization of his own story of the same title. In the company will be Mona Bruns, Helen Westley, Frank Thomas, Geoffrey C. Stein, Ruby Craven, Ralph Bunker, Grace Morse, Beatrice Prentice, Noel Tearle, Theodore Doucet, Phil White, Lois Francis Clark, Hilda Englund, and Gladys Plinge.

"The Betrothal," like "Tillie," found its business improved after the moving notice had been posted, and by virtue of a hurried booking it will resume at the Century on Wednesday afternoon, the intervening period being required for scene rehearsals. There is a sentimental association in the booking, for it was at the Century that "The Blue Bird" was first produced.

Ibsen's "Ghosts" will be given a special performance on Friday afternoon at the Longacre, with Robert Whittier, sponsor for the performance, playing Oswald. Maud Hildyard, associated with Tree in London, will make her American début as Mrs. Alving, and Augustin Duncan, William Babcock, and Helen Freeman will complete the cast.

"The Big Chance" will leave the Forty-eighth Street Theatre after another week, but the next incumbent is as yet unannounced. It is not unlikely, however, to be the Shuberts' production of the farce, "A Sleepless Night," which boasts Irene Fenwick, Donald Gallaher, and Ernest Glendinning among its cast.

Tonight's free entertainments for uniformed men will be "Eyes of Youth," at the Manhattan Opera House, and "Up in Mabel's Room," at the Eltinge—presented under the auspices of the Stage Women's War Relief.

THE ARTS OF THE THEATRE

By RACHEL CROTHERS.

THE more I work in the theatre the more convinced I am that the art of the theatre might be, and ought to be, the greatest of all arts, and that it is beset and bedraggled by more difficulties and dangers than any other. It might and ought to be the greatest because it takes with itself and uses all the other arts, and because it has all of life and all of humanity to use as its model, and because its possibilities of expression are limited only by the ability of its workmen—not by the medium in which they work, as is the case with sculpture, painting, and music.

But its very breadth and scope and the wide diversity of crafts and trades which the theatre employs are some of its greatest dangers. Through the costumer, the scene builder, and the scene painter, much of the quality and atmosphere of the play must be reached. Through the actor—out of the actor and his mentality, his personality, his understanding, his experience of life, his physical self—must come the innate meaning of the play. Through a great many minds, all as different as different can be, this meaning must sift, and when the curtain finally goes up on the finished production the thing which the audience sees is the combination of all these elements, marshaled together and blended into harmony, each filling its place in the whole composition.

The writer of plays who has the training and the gift to direct his own plays is indeed fortunate, for he molds out of all this conglomerate material the living creations of the people who were born in his brain, and puts them in the exact surroundings in which his mind has seen them. The most gifted actor in the world needs direction, for he is playing only a part of a whole, and his great gift, however individually powerful it may be, is valuable only when it balances in complete consistency with the entire unit.

In short, acting is like an orchestration and each actor plays in the same relation to the composition as a whole as do the musicians in an orchestra, and should be as completely led and directed as are the individual musicians. This is a very old and well-known statement, but alas! while no one disputes its truth, it is not well enough fulfilled in the theatre, and the great point in which acting should follow the methods of orchestration is in the exactness and rigid perfection with which music is executed once its interpretation is determined. There is no tolerance, no place in the music world, for the performer who strikes a note clearly and truly one time and a shade sharp or a shade flat at another. Harmony is harmony, and once harmony has been found by the composer, the musician, and the conductor, it is crystallized into an unchanging, unchangeable form, and remains safe and beautiful, held by technique.

Imagine the chaos in an opera if, after all the elements which enter into it have been brought to the highest point of perfection possible by great artists, variation creeps in and the individuals gradually change slightly the notes and the interpretations! It is as unthinkable as pulling out the foundations of a whole building and expecting that building to retain the strength and outlines on which it was built. None the less rigidly should the acting of a play be held after the best has been decided by the united work of all concerned. The highest point in good work is naturally reached while the actors and directors are putting into it all that experience and ability have to give, and while this is warmed and quickened by the heat of effort, by the sparks that ignite and glow and burn in the workshop when a piece of art is in the making and the sympathy and the creative blood of the artists are at highest tide. Not that the added inspiration which comes from an audience cannot heighten this glowing and make it burst into a still brighter flame, but really to change a performance after it has been "born" is bad art, bad business, and bad workmanship.

All this is especially true in the intimate colloquial character of the writing and acting in modern plays. The naturalness which is coming more into the stage makes all acting more closely woven together, more interdependent than in the more artificial methods of yesterday.

The quiet realism of the best in the theatre of our hour necessitates a very close and sympathetic playing together and a complete understanding on the part of the actor as to exactly what every other character in the play means and how each actor means to play it. The more complete the sympathy between the actors the better work each one does, the more each helps the other and the more necessary it is that each can depend absolutely upon an unchanging performance from the other.

A very striking illustration of this is in my latest play, "A Little Journey," in which a group of human beings are closely held together by the confines of a sleeping car. Most of the characters are on the stage at the same time, and there is never a moment when each and every one of them is not a vital part of the story and responsible for making the story live. Whether in the spoken scene or a background or undercurrent of it, each actor is doing something to help the scene which is being played at the moment. Because of the peculiarly intimate proximity of these people, the action is so tightly interwoven that the slightest deviation in one part upsets all the others and destroys the intricate network of the whole. The small bits of everyday life, which seem so impulsive and spontaneous as they are played, are in reality solidly and scientifically woven together.

The more reverently we regard the art of acting and producing plays as one of infinite exactness and technique, illuminated by the temperament and inspiration of the actor and the director, the more justice we do the theatre and the more fully we realize the vast possibilities for beauty and great work in the theatre.

WHAT THE STAGE MANAGER DOES

TEN days ago, when the anti-tax fight of the theatres was at its height, the stage manager of "East Is West," one Edwin Maxwell, came before the curtain nightly at the Astor to enlist the audiences in the fight. As is generally the case with the stage manager, Maxwell plays a small rôle in the play—that of a Chinaman. But he made his tax speech in evening clothes, making a complete change for the purpose.

The stage manager, despite the extent of his duties and responsibilities, is a figure in the theatre who is practically unsung. (He must not be confused with the stage director, who directs rehearsals and is finished with the production once it is running smoothly.) The work of the stage manager is a labor of infinite detail. It begins with the calling of the company for the first rehearsal, and it continues so long as the play continues, and even afterward. Much depends upon it, but for all this the stage manager is not a high-salaried man. Generally he receives little more than the actor playing a small part.

A conscientious stage manager is always the first man at rehearsals and the last to leave. He is in the nature of a secretary to the director in these early days. He has charge of the manuscripts and the typewritten parts, and is responsible in the event of their loss—and it might be added that they are invariably being lost. One of his earliest duties is to note the names and addresses of the members of the cast, for he is likely to be called upon to round them up on an instant's notice. At rehearsals, among other things, he keeps the players from strolling out of the theatre between their scenes—the propensity of actors for eluding the eye at rehearsals is wondrously developed—and he keeps the manuscript always open before him for the purpose of noting such changes of dialogue, and such stage business, as the director or author may make. Should the director inform a player that he sits, crosses, or otherwise disports himself at a certain line, it is the duty of the stage manager to note the direction at the proper place in the 'script. Frequently the changes are revolutionary, but the stage manager is supposed to note them all. He receives no credit for doing so, but he will undoubtedly be censured if he does not.

He rehearses the company at such times as the director is absent, and he is responsible for the correct preparation of carpenter's, electrician's, and property man's "plots," so that adequate preparations will be made in theatres where the show will go. Just before the show opens he writes the "call" and puts it on the bulletin board for all to read. It gives complete information as to what time the train leaves, the hotel accommodations which are available in the town where they are to play (he has been given this information by the advance man,) and the time when trunks will be called for. An actor has two kinds of trunks—hotel trunks and theatre trunks—and they are generally called for at different times. It is the stage manager who must see to it that the trunks are ready, or, at least, that the actor understands thoroughly when they must be ready.

Frequently it is the stage manager who assigns the dressing rooms, thereby making himself unpopular with nearly all the members of the cast, no matter how he allots them. Not infrequently, also, he selects the understudies—the minor members of the cast who are to understudy the major rôles—and invariably he is the man who rehearses them. This is done early in the run of the play, and generally in the mornings. He takes the understudies one at a time and rehearses with each until he is satisfied that he knows the part thoroughly. So, whereas every other member of the cast may find a morning which is his own, the stage manager rarely does. Even after the understudy has learned the part there is the danger of his forgetting it, and he must be drilled at regular intervals. When one of the principals falls ill the understudy leaves his minor rôle to play the bigger part, and it is the stage manager who then plays the minor rôle. It may be that he is playing one or two parts already—he is invariably playing at least one—but he must take on the additional part as well unless it happens that two of the characters are supposed to play a scene together.

When the play starts running it is the stage manager who runs it. For several weeks, when he is not playing his part on the stage, he stands in the wings with the 'script ready to prompt any player who may falter. Even after the play is "set" and the players know their lines beyond the possibility of forgetting, the stage manager must still be found in the wings, seeing to it that nothing is amiss and keeping all backstage conversations to a strict whisper. It is he who sees to it that every player is in the theatre before he gives the signal for the overture, and it is he who is responsible for the signal which rings up the curtain. New York playgoers, accustomed to 8:15 in the advertisements and 8:40 in the theatres, probably will be unable to commend the stage manager unduly for his work in this direction, but there are, of course, conditions which not even a competent stage manager can overcome.

Poor stage management brings about a poor performance and good stage management means a smooth performance—so smooth, sometimes that the audience is quite likely to forget that some one must have been responsible. It is the stage manager who must see to everything. Even though he must change his clothes between acts, and despite the fact that his dressing room is invariably the most inaccessible of all, he must be down stairs in time to inspect the stage before he gives the signal for the curtain. He is held to strict accountability by the manager also, for the times at which the curtains rise and drop. At the Astor, and in many other houses, he is expected to fill out a card nightly, giving the times at which every curtain ascended and fell. This, in turn, gives the running times of the various acts, and, as the proper running time was fixed early in the play's career, the manager is thus able to tell whether his company is playing too rapidly or too slowly. And in either of these events, of course, it is the stage manager who must call a rehearsal and correct the fault.

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

STRANGE lengths have been go to in the last few days in an effort to find a playhouse in whi "Tillie" might continue its interrupted run. The play, produced Henry Miller's Theatre three weeks a held out no great hope of populari during its first ten days, and in the middle of the second week the owne of the theatre contracted for Mrs. Fiske appearance. George C. Tyler, the pro ducer of "Tillie," felt that the pla was one which required a few weeks which to find its public, and vice versa but that ultimate popularity was certain. His judgment began to be born out during the last week, when the box office receipts advanced steadily, but by that time, of course, it was too late to alter the Fiskian booking.

The search for another playhouse began nine days ago, and is still being continued. Mr. Tyler being an ally of Klaw & Erlanger, only the theatres of that firm or their associates, of course could be taken into the reckoning, and none of these was available. Thomas Dixon, lessee of the Harris Theatre, was practically persuaded on the Saturday morning of the second week of "Tillie" to permit the play to be transferred to the Harris tomorrow. On that Saturday afternoon, however, the Harris was all but sold out for the matinée of "The Invisible Foe," and Mr. Dixon decided instead to keep his own play going.

An attempt was next made to secure the Forty-eighth Street Theatre, from which "The Big Chance" was unofficially announced to depart at the end of this week. There followed a telegraphic correspondence with William A. Brady, who was in Chicago, but the deal fell through, probably because of Brady's Shubert affiliations.

The next thought, strangely enough, was of the Century, despite the fact that a quiet comedy of the "Tillie" type would be hopelessly out of place in that house. Mr. Tyler fancied that the interest created by so unusual a booking would offset its possible disadvantages, but the terrific cost of operation at the Century finally compelled the abandonment of this thought.

Then came the idea of re-opening Daly's Theatre, which has been standing idle for countless months after a sad adventure with burlesque. The building was inspected with a view to quick renovation, so as to permit its reopening tomorrow night, and the owners of the property were sufficiently interested to consider a proposition for rehabilitation, but it was discovered that it would be impossible to put the theatre into condition within the time limit.

Whereupon—this was last Tuesday—the play was hurriedly booked at the Standard for a week, and the hunt for a Broadway house went on. What will probably happen, according to present indications, is that the play will be kept alive by presentation for four matinées a week—Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays—at a theatre housing another attraction, and that the regular run will be resumed as soon as a theatre can be found.

A report of the week links the names of Winchell Smith and William Collier, the rumor being that Mr. Collier will be found under Smithandgolden management next season in a Smith-made play. Collier, however, is probably the most uncertain of the stars, and it is dangerous to endeavor to predict his plans more than three days in advance. Several times during the last few seasons he has been about to return to the Cohan and Harris management—or his friends have insisted—but it is doubtful if Collier himself knows his intentions a whole season ahead.

"Oh, Look!" which created no particular excitement when it was first played here, is said to be about to return in its revised and more popular form. Since its Vanderbilt Theatre days the show has been restaged and adorned with the dancing Dolly sisters, with the result that it has been one of the biggest musical successes on the road this season. It is expected to begin its second New York run in about a month.

Not "Chloe in Love," as recently reported, but a comedy by George Scarborough, will be Ruth Chatterton's next play. "Chloe in Love," the work of William J. Hurlbut, was put in rehearsal by Henry Miller a week ago, but rehearsals had barely got under way before they were halted pending changes in the play. In the meantime Miss Chatterton will be seen in the Scarborough play, said to have a cast of only six.

Marjorie Rambeau, as intimated in these columns a week ago, is to appear here in a new play before blossoming forth as a London star. The new piece is the work of Leighton Graves Osmun and is the production of Arthur Hopkins, Miss Rambeau being merely borrowed for the occasion from the obliging Mr. Woods. The name of the play is "The Fortune Teller," and it will be produced in New York during the week of Feb. 24, probably at the Republic Theatre.

"Tumble Inn," the musical comedy which Arthur Hammerstein is at present diligently rehearsing, is in reality that well-known farcical opus, "Seven Days," done over and tricked out with tunes. The memorable rôle of the burglar will be intrusted to Frisco of jazz fame.

The Shakespeare Playhouse performance of "As You Like It" has been postponed until Feb. 14, and, accordingly, "Hamlet" will be played as usual this week—Friday afternoon and Saturday morning at the Plymouth.

VOCAL VALUES AND PERSONAL

BY JAMES GIBBONS HUNEKER

THE penalty of publicity is one that singers seldom evade. Little need to give the reason, nevertheless, for sensitive souls it is a trial to see one's personality put in the wash, squeezed and hung up to dry with other linen in the pitiless laundry of the press. Some singers are born advertisers, some achieve advertising, but few have advertising thrust upon them. That sort usually fade into shadowland rather than face the fierce white light which beats upon the operatic throne. Really, it must be disconcerting for a woman singer to hear herself discussed as if she were a racehorse. Every point in her make-up is put on a platter ready to serve up hot in the newspapers. You fancy yourself overhearing the conversation of jockeys and trainers. "Oi sye, Bill, that there filly is goin' queer. Jest look at her fetlocks, and her crupper is gettin' too heavy. Take her out for an hour's spin on the downs. Breathe her a bit and then give her a hard sweatin' run and a rub down. No water, Bill, mind ye, or I'll knock yer block off."

The private life of a prima-donna is not unlike that of a racing mare's. Flesh reduction, all the succulent food—and champagne—are banished; indulgence spells decadence, and decadence is eagerly noted by the psychic detectives known as music critics. We are not in the game to find fault as simple souls imagine, but to register values, vocal and personal values. It's a pity, but this is a condition and not a theory. We have heard of a Mary Garden cult. Now, as has been said by Dr. Wicksteed, a cult is always annoying to those who do not join in it, and generally hurtful to those who do. But is there such a Garden cult? We doubt it. She has a certain elect following, the "twelve superior persons scattered throughout the universe," and for them she can do no wrong. She has aroused the critical antagonism of some who, rightly enough, point out her obvious limitations. To these the gruff reply of Brahms is appropriate. A presuming youth called his attention to a theme in a work of his which was evidently borrowed from Mendelsohn. "That any fool can see," said the crusty Johannes. The voice of Miss Garden is sometimes a voice in the wilderness: sandy, harsh, yet somehow expressive. The same may be said of Geraldine Farrar, who every year is gravitating toward the zone, not of silence, but of the singing actress. A Gallic, not on Italian zone. Voice does not play the major rôle; acting, that is, dramatic characterization, does. Not to recognize in Miss Garden the quintessence of this art—not a new one, and its most perfect flowering is the art of Yvette Guilbert—is to miss the real Mary Garden. Voilà tout! We saw a like misunderstanding of Eleonora Duse. Immediately she was compared, and unfavorably, with Sarah Bernhardt, when she was achieving something vastly different, and I think, vastly finer. Sarah was more brilliant. Duse more human; the one an orchestra, the other an exquisitely balanced string quartet. Mary Garden is the nearest approach to Duse on the lyric stage.

Mary Garden, too, is "different," in the sense Stendhal meant the banal word. Her cadenced speech is not singing in the Italian manner. To begin with, her tonal texture is not luscious. But there are compensations. Every phrase is charged with significance. She paints with her voice, and if her palette is composed of the cooler tones, if the silver-grays and sombre greens of a Velasquez predominate, it is because she needs just such a gamut with which to load her brush. She is a consummate manipulator of values. To be sure, we do not expect the glorious torrential outbursts of Margaret Matzenauer. Why confuse two antithetical propositions? I don't look at one of the Paul Cézannes in the rare collection of Miss Bliss expecting the gorgeous hues of a Monticelli. Cézanne is a master of values. And if these similes seem far-fetched—which they are not; music and color are twins in the Seven Arts—then let us pitch upon a more homely illustration: Mary Garden is an opal, Margaret Matzenauer a full-blown rose. Voltaire said that the first man who compared a woman to a rose was a poet; the second, an ass. I hope Mme. Matzenauer will accept the simile in the poetic sense.

Nuance, which alone makes art or life endurable, becomes an evocation with Miss Garden. I lament that she is not in a more intimate setting, as the misted fire and subtle modulations of her opaline art and personality are lost in the huge auditorium of the Lexington Theatre. I saw her, a slip of a girl, at Paris, early in this century, and framed by the Opéra Comique, of whose traditions she is now a distingushed exponent. She was then something precious: a line of Pater's prose, the glance of one of Da Vinci's strange great ladies; a chord by Debussy; honey, tiger's blood, and absinthe; or like the enigmatic pallor we see in Renaissance portraits; cruel, voluptuous, and suggesting the ennui of Watteau's "L'Indifferent."

She is all things to all men.

There are those who see in her the fascinating woman. And they are justified in their belief. There are those who discover in her something disquieting, ambigious; one of Baudelaire's "femmes damnées" from whom he fashioned his Beethovenian harmonies, fulgurating, profound: "Descendez le chemin de l'enfer etérnel! * * * flagellés par un vent qui ne vient pas du ciel." * * * And there is still another group to which I adhere, one that envisages Mary in the more lucid light of an admirable artist, who has fashioned of her body and soul a rare instrument giving forth the lovely music of attitude, gesture, pose, and rhythm. There are moments when she evokes the image of the shadow of a butterfly on a star; and often she sounds the shuddering semitones of sex; as in Thaïs. The Mélisande moods are hers, the dim remote poesy of antique sonorous tapestries; and the "modern" note of Louise, grazing the vulgar, though purified by passion. But the dissenters no doubt believe in the Cambodian proverb when estimating the singing of both Geraldine Farrar and Mary Garden. It runs thus: When in Hades it is bad form to speak of the heat.

With Amelita Galli-Curci we enter another vocal territory. Here the domain of pyrotechnical vocalism. And let it be added, the public cares more for fireworks than lyric-dramatic art. To rival the flute is more to the groundlings than to declaim "Ah! mon fils" as does magnificent Matzenauer. Everything in its place, au fur et à mesure. Galli-Curci did not win the popular ear merely on the east wind. To begin with she has a beautiful voice, and, while she has some lamentable mannerisms, not to say vocal vices, her personality is "simpatico," her temperament, thought not passionate, is musical. Her face in its length reminds one of either Paganini or George Eliot. She has been called "a Botticelli." Yes, a Hebraic Botticelli, which is manifestly a contradiction in terms. In "La Traviata" she recalled a quaint and lovely daguerreotype, or an old Cosway miniature. She has the appealing pose, she seems to plead with her audience. In the case of little women it never fails. Think of Maude Adams. And Galli-Curci has "such a wye with her," like the cockney song. If her voice lasts and she grows artistically—well, it is easy to predict her future.

If? That's the question. The last time I heard her was in the Metropolitan Opera House, at Philadelphia. It was May 1st, 1918, and she sang in recital. The next day in The Press newspaper of that city, I wrote of her singing, and one paragraph I may be pardoned for quoting—sometimes I quote myself without quotation marks: "Her voice is of a lovely quality, particularly in the middle register, not golden like Melba's, but smooth, velvety, never 'white,' and capable of a ductile legato. But this natural gift is less admired than her staccato—which is not brilliant, though extremely facile—or her trill, which is flexible, yet far from equal, and is not altogether produced by the glottis, hence it sags from true pitch. An eminent authority, Mme. Ashforth of New York, and the teacher of many well-known coloratura singers, Bessie Abott, Lucy Gates, and others, told me that she admired Galli-Curci, but believed she had deplorable vocal habits.

"The reason she frequently sings off the key is because her voice is not accurately focused on the resonators. She allows her tone to spread in the mouth before she brings it to the front of her face where the hard resonators are situated, (forehead, nose, teeth,) and thus it fritters away on the soft tissues. Hence the imperfect pitch in vibrations. She does not make the most of her vocal resources. With a mellifluous organ like hers she should be a graceful Mozart singer. She is not, as her 'Deh vieni e non tardar' proved on this occasion. She is not brilliant in the sense that Luisa Tetrazzini was brilliant. She has a sympathetic delivery, yet she lacks variety in tone-color. She showers her staccati with effortless technique, but the dynamic tang is absent. Her velocity passages are excellent, not by any means extraordinary. Frieda Hempel, Mabel Garrison, Marie Barrientos come to the memory at this juncture, and not to their disadvantage, technically considered, is any comparison. We suspect that Galli-Curci is not the possessor of a prime dramatic temperament. Watching her in opera confirms this impression. She is as exciting as soda water. She is sweet, gentle, and evokes a certain charm. A stylist, as is Marcella Sembrich, she is not, for she has not such superior musical intelligence. But, then, Sembrich was matchless in song recital. Even comparing the younger woman with such a great exemplar of her art we pay Galli-Curci a tribute. She has an open road before her, and if she chooses to traverse it she will surely attain Parnassus. At present her singing and interpretations leave much to be desired, despite her instantaneous appeal to mixed audiences."

This is reprinted, not to attenuate the artistic reputation of a delightful young singer, but to formulate the matter fairly and squarely. Overpraised last season, she runs the risk of too caustic criticism this. It is only just to state that at the Philadelphia concert she was exhausted by the strain of an arduous Winter, she was ill besides, and her domestic kettle was beginning to boil over. A voice like hers is fragile. Worriment is as bad as too much success. All singers of the uneasy sex embrace the heresy of happiness. Happiness, whether matrimonial or of the extra-rib sort, is killing; though a coloratura singer thrives better on it; for dramatic sopranos and contraltos a moderate dosage of unhappiness is splendid forcing ground for the emotional side of their temperaments. And divorce never slays. Consider Adelina Patti, and Ilma da Murska, and several contemporary artists. So we needn't worry about Galli-Curci. The chiefest thing is whether her deviation from pitch isn't the result of her tone production rather than a defective ear.

Mme. Frida Ashforth inclines to the belief expressed above. She ought to know. Today she celebrates her eightieth birthday, and after an operatic career in company with famous singers, she has taught for the past half century in this city. She is the doyenne of vocal teachers. I greatly respect her judgment, as I delight in her anecdotes about Adelina and Carlotta Patti when they lived here with their mother, the once-celebrated dramatic soprano, Caterina Barili-Patti. These girls, with the little Frida, must have raised merry Cain in the old Eleventh Street house. (I fancy Mme. Ashforth has slipped a cog in her memory. She means 70 years old, not 80. She looks 60.)

A live larynx is worth a ton of vocal history. It is all right for oldsters, like myself, to boast of the voices of yesteryear, but Patti, Melba, Eames, Calvé, Lehmann, Ternina, Sembrich—these are only names to conjure with, no longer realities. Amelita Galli-Curci, youthful, charming, a singer born, faces the present generation and sings. The great shadows vanish. Ouf! but it grows chilly and drear in the lonesome latter years. Ring down the curtain on the past. The queens of coloratura are dead! long live the queens of coloratura! Saluto! Amelita—Galli the Curch, as Raymond Hitchcock calls her—with the bird-like voice. Also salute resurrected "Linda di Chamounix"! And may the Lord temper the wind to our venerable ears!

TO REVIVE "ROBIN HOOD."

"Robin Hood," in an all-star revival, will open the twentieth week of the Society of American Singers at the Park Theatre tomorrow night. English in scene and story, it was written here by DeKoven and Smith, produced at the Chicago Opera House June 9, 1890, by the Bostonians, and in London, at the Prince of Wales's, in January of the next year. Its revival by Metropolitan artists was at the New Amsterdam in May, 1912.

After almost thirty years, a mention of the opera's name recalls the figures of Henry Clay Barnabee, W. H. Macdonald, Jessie Bartlett Davis, Eugene Cowles, and the rest of their famous company. Bessie Abbott and Anna Bussert were alternate prima donnas, at the Knickerbocker and New Amsterdam Theatres, in the last revival in New York.

Orville Harrold heads the new cast. Miss Bussert reappears as Maid Marian, James Stevens as Little John, Cora Tracy as Alan-a-Dale, Herbert Waterous as Will Scarlet, John Phillips as Sir Guy, Kate Condon as Dame Durden. Heard for the first time here, in addition to Mr. Harrold, will be Will Danforth as Sheriff of Nottingham, Bertram Peacock as Friar Tuck, Gladys Caldwell as Annabel.

American Singers' Long Season.

Seven performances a week are planned at the Park. This will require changes in some rôles, Craig Campbell alternating with Harrold, Blanche Duffield with Miss Bussert, and John Quine with James Stevens. Charles Jones is stage manager, and the orchestra is led by John McGhie.

Mr. Hinshaw has announced this fourteenth production under his management as "the crowning effort of the society's season," which may or may not imply that the American Singers' phenomenal run is to end within a six months' period. On that point, he is silent as yet.

A promise that "special Gilbert and Sullivan matinées may be added" from time to time is taken to mean that there will be opera at the Park for as long as the present popular demand shall continue.

NEW MUSIC ISSUES.

"The First American Composer," issued by the A. P. Schmidt Company, is an arrangement by Harold V. Milligan of six songs by Francis Hopkinson, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Hopkinson was a Philadelphia lawyer and first Judge of the Admiralty Court in Pennsylvania, who as a pastime wrote songs some years earlier than the Boston tanner, William Billings, often called "father of American music." Judge Hopkinson in 1788 sent a volume of his compositions to his friend George Washington, whose reply is printed in facsimile in Mr. Milligan's thirty-three-page reprint of some of the airs. What the editor believes to be the "first song ever written in America by an American" here bears the engaging title, "My Days Have Been So Wondrous Free," and is dated 1759. There are also "O'er the Hills," "Beneath a Weeping Willow's Shade," "Come, Fair Rosina," "My Generous Heart Disdains," and "The Traveller Benighted." A criticism that has been made of many old airs, notably of "The Star-Spangled Banner," occurs here, too, the modern musician observing that "the range of the notes was frequently too great for any but phenomenal voices." Mr. Milligan has curtailed some flights, and has written out in full harmony the accompaniments merely indicated by the composer. He hopes these oldest American songs may take a place on recital programs along with old English, such as those of Dr. Arne.

Soldiers and Sailors' songs abound in the current issues of Boosey & Co. There are "The Company Sergeant Major," words by P. H. B. Lyon, music by Wilfred Sanderson; "Little French Baby," words and music by Douglas Grant; "On the Shore at Pelham Bay," Avery Werner and Vernon Eville; "Beneath the Moon of Lombardy," Edward Lockton and Harold Craxton; "When the Boys Come Home," a version of Colonel John Hay's words, by Frances Allitsen, and "I Shall Meet You," E. M. Chesham and Wilfrid Sanderson, this last being the "home-coming song" sung by John McCormack. Not of war, but home, is "The Little White Boat," verses by Mary Sanford Morrison, air by Homer Samuels, dedicated to Mme. Galli-Curci.

Ten pieces for piano by Reginald De Koven are published by the John Church Company, one group including "Monotone," "Romance," and "Humoreske"; another "Moment Musical," "Nocturne," "Barcarolle," "Etude," and the third "Aveu," "Coquettrie," and "Reve Realise."

"LINDA" AND GALLI-CURCI

"LINDA DI CHAMOUNIX," with another of the famous "mad scenes," by Donizetti, which has probably not been sung in New York since Patti gave it twenty-eight years ago at the Metropolitan, will be new to a house sold out at the Lexington on Tuesday night, when Galli-Curci makes her reentrance in the title rôle, just as she first appeared last season in the unfamiliar surroundings of Meyerbeer's "Dinorah." Five operas, one of which is "Pelléas," will be added to the Chicago stars' repertory in the next five days, and this second week of the visit will contain but two repetitions, both on Saturday. Next Sunday Galli-Curci sings at the Hippodrome, where the vast ground floor will be sold at $10 a chair for the benefit of Stony Wold Sanatorium.

Mascagni's "Isabeau" returns to the Lexington tomorrow night, with Anna Fitziu, a young American who was in the composer's original production at Buenos Aires. She created the name part, sung in Chicago and New York last season by Rosa Raisa. Others new besides Miss Fitziu are Baklanoff as the King, Pavloska as one of the Lady Godiva's attendant women, and Boulliiez among the cavaliers. Forrest Lamont reappears, as do the Misses Lazzari, Sharlow, and several more. Sturani is the conductor for "Godiva's Ride."

With Galli-Curci in "Linda" on Tuesday evening are Lamont as the Paris painter, Trevisan as the interfering Marquis, Stracciari and Claessens as parents of the heroine, Carolina Lazzari as the boy friend, Sharlow as a peasant girl, Virgilio Lazzari as the parish priest, and Sturani conducting.

"Pelleas" Finds Champions Here.

Debussy's "Pelléas and Mélisande," with Garden and Maguenat, will be a challenge to all the devotees of French lyric drama on Wednesday night. Bouilliez and Huberdeau will sing Goulaud and Arkel. Marguerite La Mare will be boy Yniold, Berat the Genevieve, Nicolay the doctor, and Charlier will conduct.

Massenet's "Manon" on Thursday will engage Yvonne Gall, O'Sullivan, Journet, Maguenat, the Misses Maxwell, Sharlow, Pruzan, Berat, Messrs. Dua and Defrere, led by the Belgian, Hasselmans.

In "Lucia," sold out on Friday, Galli-Curci will make her second appearance, and Alessandro Dolci his début. Others are Alma Peterson, Rimini, Dua, G. Minerva, and the veteran Arimondi. Mr. Campanini himself will conduct.

Fevrier's "Gismonda," with Mary Garden, will be repeated at the Saturday matinée, and that evening Tamaki Miura will sing again in "Madame Butterfly," her first, it is said, at popular prices in New York.

Story of "Linda di Chamounix."

Grandmothers of today once knew the story of Linda, the girl from Chamounix, who followed love's young dream to Paris, was driven mad by an old Marquis, and restored to her senses when the Marquis's son brought her back to the Alps. They used to listen to this recital with smiles as well as tears, for Linda's madness, like Dinorah's, ends in wedding bells, and not in double tragedy, like poor Lucy's of Lammermoor.

Linda sings her joy in life, which is also a joy in good singing, in the opera's first act, and a Paris painter down the vale of Chamounix joins her in a love duet. Her father's farm is mortgaged, all unknown, to the young man's father. The parish priest fears a tangle of these lives, and to escape it the girl is sent to Paris with boyish Pierotto and a troupe of singing Savoyards.

In Paris the plot thickens; her Carlo's family wish him to wed another, while the old Marquis is ready to lavish gifts on the girl. Her Louis XV. boudoir—the date is 1790—makes the old home friends suspicious. She gives alms to a supposed beggar—her father—who curses her. When others tell her of a marriage taking place at Carlo's home, she goes mad.

"Mad Scene" Has Happy Ending.

Back in Chamounix, the Savoyards return, followed by unhappy Linda with the faithful young Pierotto. Carlo, too, comes with the deeds of the old farm, for it was all a mistake, that affair in Paris. Linda swoons, as heroines of romance used to do, and she awakes in possession of home, parents, lover, all she holds dear in the world. So it ends happily.

The real story of "Linda," apart from this, is rather a story of its heroines, for prima donnas have long liked the rôle. Donizetti produced the opera on his grand tour of Europe, at Vienna, in May, 1842. It reached Paris in November and London the following June.

Mme. Persiani sang it at her benefit there, with Mario and Lablache, and Lumley, the English manager, records how critics reversed themselves in phrases of retraction. Donizetti was suddenly found to possess "to a considerable degree the gift of melody."

Clotilda Barili—not Patti's mother, who was Caterina Barili—was the first Linda in New York at Palmo's Opera House, Jan. 4, 1847. Another, at the Academy, March 9, 1861, was Clara Louise Kellogg. The last, but not least, nearly thirty years later, was Patti herself.

Patti's Metropolitan "Linda."

There was "a magnificent audience" at the Metropolitan Opera House on a Wednesday evening, April 23, 1890, as remarked next morning in THE TIMES, which continued: "This was not to be wondered at, for the devoted attachment of not only this public, but the entire music-loving world, to the vocal accomplishments of the queen of song, Adelina Patti, is a fact that is established beyond the need of reiteration or comment."

Whenever she appeared, wrote the critic, "in one of those rôles which the universal public has learned to recognize as especially hers," there was bound to be a large and enthusiastic audience. Other times, other prima donnas—but each generation has some one of whom it speaks as men spoke of Patti.

"Last night," the record continued, "the diva appeared in one of her favorite parts, that of the delightful and picturesque heroine of 'Linda di Chamounix,' which is one of Donizetti's most tuneful works. In spite of the marvelous regeneration of dramatic music which these now living have enjoyed, this bright and pretty little opera maintains its firm hold upon the affections of those who love the old-fashioned art of bel-canto.

"It was a foregone conclusion that its announcement would denude the ticket rack at the box office, and great, indeed, was the disappointment when on April 9 the diva was suddenly taken sick and was unable to appear.

When Abbey Was Consul.

"But Henry E. Abbey and Adelina Patti are two people who never deprive the public of its just dues, and so last night's extra performance was given in order that those who were disappointed on the original date might have their money's worth. The house was packed. There was not an empty box, not an empty seat, and hardly an available foot of standing room to spare.

"The diva was in magnificent voice and in the finest of spirits. Her beautiful mastery of the whole resources of the best Italian method of singing was never displayed to better advantage. She sang literally like a bird, but like such a bird as never was heard in any forest. Enthusiastic and tumultuous applause followed every effort, and she was called out dozens of times and laden with flowers. It is impossible to say anything in the nature of comment on her work. Only lavish praise can be poured upon her for her beautiful singing, which delighted thousands, as it has done since 1859, and as we hope it will continue to do for years to come."

A METROPOLITAN "PETRUSHKA"

STRAVINSKY'S last word in Russian ballet, "Petrushka," staged by Adolph Bolm, who was the brains of the Diaghileff tour, and all newly pictured by John Wenger and painted by James Fox, will be danced for the first time by regular members of the Metropolitan company on Thursday next, following in a double bill Verdi's "Traviata," in which Charles Hackett will be heard with Hempel and De Luca. Moranzoni conducts the opera, Monteux the ballet. "Petrushka" has been called a dumb "Pagliacci." To carry out the simile, it may be said that Bolm will dance the "tenor" or Caruso rôle, Bonfiglio the "baritone" villain, or Blackamoor, and Galli the Ballerina. Bartik will be the Magician, Agnini an old merchant, and the Misses Smith, Rudolf, Ogden, and Roggie street dancers and gypsies.

Operas of the Metropolitan's thirteenth week are all repetitions, except for a new ballet on Thursday. Mr. Gatti's list includes "La Reine Fiammette" tomorrow, for the second time, with Farrar, Lazaro, Didur, and Rothier; Wednesday, "La Forza del Destino," Caruso, Ponselle, Montesanto, Mardones; Thursday, "Traviata" and the revival of "Petrushka," with cast already announced; Friday, "L'Oracolo," with last night's singers, and "Pagliacci," with Caruso; Saturday matinée, "Carmen," with Farrar and Martinelli, and Saturday night, "Manon Lescaut," Muzio, Crimi, and others, of whom Miss Marsh appears for the first time on this stage.

No Bolshevism in "Petrushka" Plot.

The "tragic-comic ballet-pantomime scenario" used by Stravinsky is officially ascribed to Alexander Benois. "Petrushka's" plot is familiar to those who have followed the course of Russian ballets in America from Morris Gest's production of "Scheherazade," or the Metropolitan's importation of Pavlowa and Mordkin—both in 1910 or thereabouts—to the tardy arrival of Diaghileff's dancers, later joined by Nijinsky.

"In a public square of Petrograd," as the story goes, "a magician is giving his puppet show before a motley crowd. He sets a-dancing his little Ballerina with her two companions, the romantic Petrushka and the sensual Moor. A fierce quarrel breaks out between the two males over possession of the Ballerina.

"Petrushka is thrust into his dark den, there to bemoan his fate, to make a futile effort to escape, to fail in trying to win the sympathy of the Ballerina, and finally to be driven forth to die at the hands of the Moor.

"This violent episode causes consternation among the crowd of onlookers, until the Magician shows them what lies on the ground is not a man but only a rag doll."

New Scenery by Russian Artist.

It has been said recently that Igor Stravinsky was in this country, as most of Russia's other musicians now are. If so, his presence has not been made known to New York. It is no wartime arrival, but a resident of some years here, who with Bolm has prepared the present new version of Stravinsky's ballet.

John Wenger, who designed the scenery and costumes of "Petrushka," was born in Russia May 17, 1887. As a boy he attended the "Gymnasium," (Russian High School,) then later studied at the Imperial Art School. Mr. Wenger came to America about ten years ago and continued his studies at the National Academy of Design.

He has been associated with the Boston Opera Company, the Adolph Bolm Ballet Intime, and has exhibited at the art galleries and museums throughout the country.

Recently Mr. Wenger's work was seen at the Greenwich Village Theatre. At present he is the art director of the Rivoli and the Rialto.

Bolm Discusses the Ballet.

Speaking of "Petrushka" at a rehearsal lately, Adolph Bolm called attention to the fact that the work had never been shown on what was properly its native stage.

"Diaghileff had planned to go to Russia in 1914," he said, "but the breaking out of the war made this out of the question. No one else could present it there, since he was the owner of 'Petrushka' for a term of five years, and the term had not expired when the war broke out. So Petrograd was not privileged to see this ballet and the performance at the Metropolitan will be the first given by any other than the Diaghileff ensemble.

TODAY'S 1,300TH CONCERT

THIRTEEN hundred concerts of classical music by one continuing organization in one place is possibly a record unique in the world. The New York Philharmonic, in its seventy-seventh season is giving a thirteenth hundredth concert in New York this afternoon at Carnegie Hall. Its namesake in London had reached between 700 and 800 only at the close of a century just before the war, while there is but one other band of like age, in Vienna, for which figures are not available.

Percy Grainger makes his only public appearance, it is announced, at today's Philharmonic, playing Grieg's pianoforte concerto in A minor, and conducting for the first time his own "Mock Morris" and "Colonial Song." Mr. Stransky will open with Rimsky-Korsakoff's overture, "Russian Easter," and close with Dvorak's admired symphony, "From the New World."

Raoul Vidas, the young Parisian violinist, will appear with the Symphony Society in Aeolian Hall this afternoon, when Mr. Damrosch's program includes Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D minor; Mozart's violin concerto in E flat, and a novelty, "Films," sub-titled "War Pictures," by Alfred Casella, with Wagner's finale from "The Rhine Gold."

Mischa Elman, the Russian violinist, will be a guest star at the Metropolitan tonight, playing Mendelssohn's favorite concerto, Massenet's meditation from "Thais," and Sarasate's "Gypsy Airs." Diaz has an air from the tomb scene in "Romeo and Juliet," and there are songs for May Peterson.

Campanini, Hasselmans, and Polacco will conduct the Chicago stars at the Hippodrome tonight, and Fevrier will lead his hymn of the Marne, sung by Maguenat. Among others are Yvonne Gall, Fitziu, Stracciari, Journet, and Dolci, who makes his début.

Martha Atwood, soprano, at the Princess Theatre this evening, will sing Scarlatti's "O Cessate di Piagarmi," Fevrier's "Les Canaris de Verdun," Foster's "Gypsy Trail," and Crist's "Chinese Mother Goose."

Sophie Braslau, contralto of the Metropolitan, with Raoul Vidas, violin, and Salvatore de Stefano, harp, will appear tomorrow morning in the Waldorf-Astoria ballroom for the benefit of the New York Diet Kitchen Association.

Lambert Murphy, tenor, in Aeolian Hall tomorrow afternoon, will sing airs from Mozart's "Don Giovanni" and Lalo's "Le Roi d'Ys," as well as new songs of interest, closing with Ward Stephens's "Christ in Flanders," for tenor and organ.

John Powell tomorrow evening in Carnegie Hall will produce his "Sonata Noble," after a line of Lanier's; also twenty-four Chopin preludes, Franck's prelude, chorale, and fugue, and a prelude, sarabande, and toccata of Debussy.

Helen Romanoff, who is said to have sung in opera at Petrograd, will make her local début at Aeolian Hall tomorrow night, singing soprano airs of Tschaikowsky, Rachmaninoff, and a dozen Russian composers.

Magdeleine Brard, pianist with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra on its tour, will give a postponed recital in Aeolian Hall on Tuesday afternoon, playing works of Chopin, Schumann, Faure, and Liszt.

Hulda Lashanska, soprano, at her recital in Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, will sing airs from Glück's "Paris and Helen," Mozart's "Magic Flute," Faccio's "Hamlet," and many songs, including several by New Yorkers.

Irene Williams, a soprano heard last season, will appear Tuesday evening at Aeolian Hall in airs from Veracini's "Rosalinda" and Mozart's "Il Re Pastore," as well as groups of French, English, and American songs.

Henri Casadesus and this Society of Ancient Instruments will appear under the auspices of the French High Commission on Wednesday evening at Carnegie Hall in old music of Destouches, Francoeur, P. E. Bach, Borghi, and Mondonville.

Hans Barth, pianist, on Thursday afternoon at Aeolian Hall, will play Beethoven's Sonata Op. [illegible], two novelties by I. Adorab, two of his own, and pieces by Chopin, Liszt, Rubinstein, and MacDowell.

The Boston Symphony's last visit but one for this season will open Thursday evening at Carnegie Hall, with Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, Chabrier's prelude to "Gwendoline," Franck's suite from "Psyche," newly arranged, and a rhapsody by Lalo.

In place of its usual pair the Philharmonic has a single Friday matinée for Beethoven's third or "Eroica" symphony, Tschaikowsky's rarely heard pianoforte concerto No. 2 in G major, and Chabrier's "Spain." The solo pianist is Yolanda Merö.

The Orchestral Society on Friday evening in Aeolian Hall will produce Mortimer Wilson's "In Georgia" and William Schroeder's "Carnival of Gnomes." Before these are Brahms's "Tragic" overture and Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony. Max Jacobs is conductor.

Another of the Symphony Concerts for Children on Saturday morning at Aeolian Hall will present melodies from "Martha" and "Le Cid," Von Blon's "Whispering Flowers," part of Haydn's "Surprise" symphony, and Grainger's "Molly" and "Shepherds Hey."

Conductor Rabaud at next Saturday's matinée of the Boston Symphony, in Carnegie Hall will have Brahms's symphony No. 2, Faure's incidental music to "Shylock," Saint-Saëns's "Pusseton," and the "Roman Carnival" of Berlioz. The last concerts here will be March 20 and 22.

Harold Bauer, at his third Aeolian recital next Saturday, will produce Edward Royce's "A Set of Eight." He has a Bach-Tausig fugue, Schubert's B flat sonata, Schumann's "Humoresques," some Chopin, and Wagner's "Valkyries' Ride."

Guiomar Novaes will play Chopin's second concerto at a gala Philharmonic concert on Saturday night in Carnegie Hall. There is also Rachmaninoff's superb tone picture, "The Isle of the Dead," besides Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad" overture and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade."

THE TECHNIQUE OF COLORS.

MANY persons do not realize, perhaps, the importance of light and color in the making of photoplays and the difficulties that had to be overcome before anything approaching the present-day screen effects could be obtained. Something of the past period of experimentation and of the means by which satisfactory results are now produced is told in the following interview by Cecil B. De Mille, Director General of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, makers of Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

"Great were the difficulties of colors and lighting in the early days," says Mr. De Mille, "but today the problem has been reduced to an exact science. We have worked out a definite color code. Light blue, for example, is used to indicate either night or extreme cold, and the deeper shades of red are employed for the tinting of fire scenes and in certain dramas to heighten a sensational climax. The red tones somehow prepare one for dark deeds and violence.

"Yellow and rose tints are naturally warm, cheery, and soft in their effect. We naturally think of a woman who is especially white skinned as being cold and austere. In recognition of this fact, the actors are very careful in making up. Women who play rôles which are intended to be repulsive or which are not expected to gain the sympathy of the audience are careful to employ as much white in their makeup as possible. On the other hand, a girl who is playing a sympathetic and charming part avoids this chalky whiteness and will use a soft, yellowish tint. Place two women made up in this contrasting fashion beside each other on the screen, and the darker of the two will be attractive, while the dead-white of the other, with its suggestion of austerity, will make her, to a certain degree, repellent. Motion picture directors have learned by experience to use these details of make-up for the purpose of preparing the mind of the audience for action to come.

"If you are ever obsessed with a desire to learn every defect in the complexion of any person, entice your victim into the glare of the Copper-Hewitt and Klieg lights used in the studio. Such lights are also used by the Coney Island photographer, who makes your picture for 25 cents. These lights are most searching in their intensity, and bring out the slightest imperfection in the skin. This is due, I presume, to the fact that the light is so extremely intense that the redder shades are almost totally absent and the blues predominate.

"It is a considerable shock to any one who is a stranger in the studio to find his tan shoes suddenly turn an olive green as he steps into the rays of one of these lights, while almost every article of his apparel undergoes some sort of color metamorphosis. The skin itself ranges in color from purple to a sickish blue. Imagine, then, the frightful effect which would be obtained on the screen if the actors did not wear make-up when they faced the combined espionage system of the studio lights and the camera. Of course, the photograph which is flashed upon the screen in the motion picture is necessarily developed without any retouching whatsoever, and it is easy to understand the importance of make-up in the case of every player who faces the camera.

"Yellow has proven to be the solution of the motion picture producers' many difficulties in photography. This same color proved a stumbling block in the early and experimental days of photography, owing to the fact that yellow occupies that strategic position in the spectrum which contains the dividing line between those things which photograph black and those which appear white upon the screen. Until the exact line could be drawn—and it could be found only after a series of most discouraging experiments and mistakes—it was almost impossible to determine whether certain shades of yellow would appear black or white when the picture was projected. I have seen actresses step before the camera in gowns which were a blending of yellows and tans, and when the finished product appeared on the screen they discovered that they were in black and white. The darker shades had photographed black and the lighter ones white. But today this illusive color has been captured and tamed and has proven extremely useful to the producers.

"In the early days we were badly handicapped by the reflection from dead white under a strong light. A very pretty actress in a white dress would frequently be enveloped in an aurora which completely obliterated her chin and mouth. An ordinary dinner scene frequently proved heartbreaking to a director because of the fact that the reflection from the white tablecloth and napkins swamped his players, as it were, in blazes of glory. At the Lasky studio today and at almost all studios for that matter, yellow tablecloths and yellow napkins are used in dinner scenes. Thus this captive color has proven itself the solution of one of the most perplexing problems with which we had to deal."

Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Company, has proposed to the Aero Club of America that business and manufacturing firms be solicited to raise a purse of $100,000 for the aviator who succeeds in the proposed transatlantic flight, Mr. Levey says, the contributors would get their money back in advertising, as moving pictures of their plants and products would be included in the pictures of the preparations for the flight, and would be carried in their machines by those competing for the prize.

WENGER'S WAY.

THE following account of John Wenger's life and works has been supplied on request by the biographical expert of the Rivoli-Rialto organization:

When the "Impressionists" first stepped into the broad light of publicity there was a good deal of newspaper comedy and much light comment about certain examples of that school, as, for instance, "Lady with a Mustard Pot," "Nude Descending a Staircase," &c. There got to be a lay impression that Impressionism was not art but disease. But as in politics and religion, so it is in art, and the heretic of one generation is the conservative of the next. "Impressionism" makes little attention for itself today, and the public is consuming art touched by its influences without any questioning or doubting.

Which brings this article to the point that John Wenger, art director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, among other activities, is, as he admits, "a painter of the Impressionist school, with a trend toward fluid form as opposed to defined design."

Mr. Wenger was born in Russia about twenty-eight years ago, and has been working in color almost ever since. He has been in America, meaning mostly New York, for several years, and has now acquired an international reputation for the particular thing he does. Abroad he is known for his work at the Russian Imperial Art School and important works done in Paris, Berlin, and London. In New York he has had a number of exhibitions, including those at the National Academy of Design and the Brooklyn Museum. Other exhibitions have been held in Chicago, Minneapolis, Boston, Rochester, and St. Louis.

Wenger exults in landscapes and symphonic compositions, with great swirls of mingled color. The stage has given him especial opportunity for the expression of color ideas, as is evidenced by the scenic setting, new every week, at the Rivoli Theatre. He has also done settings for the Boston Opera Company and the Greenwich Village Theatre. One of Mr. Wenger's most important works of the current season is in the settings and designs for Stravinsky's ballet, "Petrouschka," to be presented at the Metropolitan this week.

ARE YOU QUALIFIED?
Excellent positions are now open to all those who qualify, not only for Government reconstruction work but to fill the many vacancies in leading New York firms. It is the general opinion that stenography is a very difficult study to master. Such is not the case, as the average Moon student can take dictation at the rate of 100 words per minute at the expiration of 30 days by the Boyd Syllab-ic System. So confident are we that any young man or woman with an average education can attain a speed of 100 words per minute in shorthand in 30 days by our Syllab-ic System that we invite you to enroll at our risk. If, after becoming a student at one of our schools and attending for three days, you feel that it will be impossible for you to master stenography in 30 days' time, we will cheerfully return the entire fee. AN INSIDE CRITIC TALKS.

THE Moving-Picture Department has received the following pointed observations from one who apparently has had the advantage of a close-up view of the making of a number of photoplays:

"In speaking of the persistent refusal to present realities on the screen it is not quite fair to include the actor in the blame. How often does a screen actor have to wear, or do, something which he knows to be wrong because the director demands it of him (or her)!

"What is so puzzling is the fact that a director will not realize, or prefers to ignore, the fact that he is surrounded with every kind of talent, and in touch with men who know every detail of each particular scene he wants to 'pull.' He seems to prefer to scramble through the scenes in his own way rather than avail himself of his opportunities.

"As an instance. A picture was being filmed in which the action hinged upon some scenes set on a golf links. When the golf scenes came to be taken it transpired that neither the director, his star, nor the assistant knew the very rudiments of the game. One of the main points of the story was that the star was a champion golfer, and had to play some brilliant shots. Well, after the waste of hours of time, spent in a very cold wind, the stuff was faked. Meanwhile there were experienced movie actors intimately acquainted with the game, who could have advised and suggested, standing around not daring to interfere. Being one of those intimately acquainted with the game, I ultimately volunteered a suggestion, which the director met by informing me that he was 'directing this picture.'

"Why is a typically English story given to a French director to be acted by an American cast, aided by American assistants and staged in the neighborhood of New York? Many thousands of dollars will be spent on such a production, in fact expense is literally no object, and yet the whole production is ruined because the director left the details to his assistants, and they knew too much to find out.

"Some scenes were being made by a French director for one of the greatest picture corporations in the world—a shooting party on a Scottish grouse moor. The director went into ecstasies of anger because he had been supplied with but eight men to form the shooting party. He demanded seventy! Seventy men to shoot grouse! Murder! Slaughter! A sport for the Kaiser! Of course he was confusing the occasion with a fox hunt where any number, mounted on horseback, with a pack of fox hounds, may particicate. The fact that one of the gamekeepers was provided with a French hunting horn—which would have scared the grouse for miles around—made the mistake evident. Some disinterested person smuggled the horn out of the picture before the scenes were 'shot.'

"Not only does a director cheerfully undertake to direct a story he knows nothing about, the plot laid in a country he is barely acquainted with, but he leaves the details in the hands of assistants, property men, and wardrobe women who know as little as he does, and then goes ahead and makes the picture. Endless delays, mistakes, waste of money, and the picture mercilessly slashed when it comes to be 'cut.' While just around the corner is a man who for a small fee could give all the information necessary.

"These remarks refer only to the New York studios, as my experience is confined to them. In Western studios, and other places, the information may not be so easily obtained—I don't know.

"A moving-picture studio contains such an even distribution of talent, prejudice, and ignorance that its atmosphere is unique. But it may be hoped that sooner or later it will be realized that youths who speak of 'youse guys' and 'dem goils' are hardly fitted intellectually to assist in the production of elaborate pictures costing many thousands of dollars and destined to be seen by a million pairs of eyes. Also that a high salary does not necessarily guarantee infallibility.

"What is required of a moving-picture director? To get his details right and to get his action explicit without the articulation of the human voice. The story is written for him, the continuity prepared for him, the photography done for him. Give him a story he understands, moderately intelligent screen actors, and his dramatic instinct should do the rest. But so long as the box office returns are all right the producers don't seem to mind how their pictures are thrown together. An expensive star and a highly paid director cover a multitude of sins.

"And through lack of serious criticism, public criticism, the whole art of the moving picture—and oftentimes of the poor actor—suffers eclipse, and its highest possibilidies remain undeveloped."

DIFFERENCES IN SCENARIOS.

VARIETY in ideas for scenario subjects is not so noticeable as variety of scenario forms, according to the testimony of those whose business it is to receive and read, if possible, the manuscripts submitted to producing campanies. For example, hear Hamilton Thompson, head of the scenario department of the Fox Film Corporation:

"The paper on which scenarios are written ranges from the coarsest wrapping paper to the finest note linen and it would take a Sherlock Holmes to decipher some of them. We have had a large number in Russian and Polish, French, Italian, and Spanish, and last week we received a story in Turkish. I give the prize for originality, however, to a woman in Iowa. She sent her brain child entirely set down on paper by means of crude drawings. It looked at first like an American adaptation of something in Egyptian or Red Indian sign language. The scenes drawn apparently dealt with the curse of drink.

"We also receive many stories from prisoners in State institutions. I always write to them, even when their scripts are quite hopeless, because one cannot ignore the attempts of these men to gain a little cheer by sending their minds beyond stone walls into the land of adventure.

"The subjects treated by amateur screen authors touch on everything from socialism to sex. The younger and more unsophisticated the writer, the deeper and more vital is the subject attempted. Very young women, for example, frequently tackle the most complex of sex problems.

"A 'find' is unusual, but we have a few scripts now, by unknown writers, which have been accepted and will be put on the screen."

Mr. Thompson said that he and his scenario staff read about one hundred stories a week.

CHURCHES ASKING $300,000,000 FUND

Drive for Home and Foreign Missions Within Five Years to Enlighten the World

WITH 25,000,000 communicants of some thirty different denominations, 200,000 individual churches and at least 20,000,000 Sunday School pupils, the leaders of the various Protestant churches plan to raise at least $300,000,000 within a period of five years for the enlightenment of the world.

Their campaign is said to be as well organized as the Liberty Loan campaigns. The country has been divided into districts, the districts into smaller localities and the localities into unions of groups of churches. That is, where a small town can boast of three or four little churches, none of which can do more than barely support itself, these have been gathered under one head and will carry on the work of meeting their allotments as one body. Then, too, just as the Liberty Loan had its Four-Minute Men, the religious organization today can boast of some 100,000 speakers who have taken it upon themselves to bring home the need of this work to their communities.

The movement started about four years ago when Dr. S. Earl Taylor, executive secretary of the Joint Centenary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, began a survey of world conditions, religious, sanitary, educational, &c. At the very beginning the Methodist Church was going to tackle the problem alone, but when the plans were presented to the other churches in the Protestant group they decided that the project was worthy of united support and that it could be most effectively carried out if all the Protestant churches put their shoulders to the wheel.

Not the least important field of the work will be home missions. There are three important phases of this: First, the treatment of the depressed, belated, or so-called inferior classes; second, the teaching of religion to the laboring classes, and third, the activities with the Indians, negroes, Mexicans, Alaskans and similar groups of the country. On the subject of those Dr. Taylor's survey bears the following message:

"The biggest piece of missionary work possible would be for the people in every Christian church to start tomorrow and be friendly, cordial, and helpful to the immigrants living at their doors. This would mean decent houses and more schools for them, and it would mean a moral education which so far they have not yet received. They are brought in touch with the worst side of American life, and that is the side that is uppermost in letters to their friends and in conversation when they return home. The failure so to apply Christianity is almost fatal. The cost to the Allies of the defection of Russia is incalculable. That defection is due to many causes, but to none more than to the stories of exploitation told by returned Russian immigrants from America. Intensive home mission work on Manhattan Island, south of Fourteenth Street, would have more than paid for itself at this juncture.

"There is every indication that the laboring classes of the world are to be very much more influential today than they have been up to now, and the gravest question today is whether their leadership shall be sane, inclusive, and religious, or whether it shall be characterized by narrowness, eccentricity, and contempt for the Church. In America alone do you find a free Church, supported only by the voluntary contributions of people who like that sort of thing. In fact, it is a most significant tribute to the vitality and power of Christianity that there have been started and are now being maintained in the United States more than 175,000 churches, not one of which receives any subsidy from the State. The religious leadership of the world at the present moment rests unquestionably with the United States.

"In a smaller but in somewhat more concrete fashion, specific home missionary activity has international implications. Money spent on Italian work in the United States bears a very intimate relationship to that spent by the Foreign Board in Italy. Money spent for the benefit of Mexican refugees makes more valuable every dollar sent to Mexico by the Foreign Board. The thousands of dollars used for Oriental work on the Pacific Coast and Hawaii are profoundly helpful to the work in China, Japan, Korea, and the Philippines."

The appreciation of the industrial problem of the present day and its relation to the church is perhaps one of the most interesting in the world survey.

"Even before the war," it is stated, "it was becoming apparent that industrial unrest in this country was increasing at an alarming rate. The American Federation of Labor has over two million members, chiefly skilled mechanics and men allied to definite trades. Of the unorganized thirty-odd million members a majority are not eligible to the American Federation of Labor because they are unskilled or migratory workers. Sporadic attempts of the I. W. W. suggest that the tendency of these unskilled workers is toward radical methods of foreign syndicalism rather than toward the more conservative methods worked out by trade unionists.

"The war has considerably intensified industrial unrest. Government control of the big industries in the emergency of war has raised, among many working groups, the question of making Government and municipal ownership permanent.

"Conscription of men's lives for the service of the State of necessity suggests that the conscription of wealth might be a close parallel. The adequate food, clothing, medical care, education and training which the State provided its armies of young men in preparation for sending them to the battlefields of Europe suggest to the radical minded an ideal for a similarly adequate preparation of each succeeding younger generation for the demands of ordinary life. The British Labor Party is considering these ideas for a proposed constitution which is receiving grave attention on the part of the British Government.

"Face to face with the possibility of such fundamental changes in the social order, the Church must realize that it, too, should begin a process of adaptation, if it is to be the master of future reconstruction.

"In the modern city industrial community there are not many homes left in the old-fashioned sense of the word. Not only the mothers, but the boys and girls, spend their days in mills and factories and this will be increasingly true unless child labor laws are passed by each State. At night these children and their mothers may sleep, five, six, and seven in a room, with men and women lodgers mixed in promiscuously beside the young girls and boys.

"It is to work among such homes as these that the Protestant Church, with its traditions of simple, wholesome life in small communities, must adapt itself, not only for the urgent needs of today, but in preparation of whatever changes may follow."

The foreign mission work covers the fields of Mexico, South America, Panama, Europe, Africa, India, China, Malasia, Japan, Korea, and the Philippines. In these countries a survey has been made along the lines of evangelistical, educational, and medical work, and the problems and means of meeting them planned in detail.

Perhaps the biggest foreign work that the churches are setting out to accomplish is that in Africa. The problem there, according to the survey, is as follows:

"Give 30,000,000 pagan black people the Gospel and thus protect them from the evils of advancing European civilization. Save the continent from Mohammedanism, which, 40,000,000 strong and crying 'Africa for Mohammed,' is now spreading over the continent its bigoted, fanatical, and intolerant faith.

"Meet our responsibility for 20,000,000 people in territories already occupied by missions or assigned us by Governments." At the present time the African is being taught to find himself industrially through the efforts of the Church missionaries. Education is given him in agricultural and industrial work in order to take him from the wild life in the jungle on the one hand and the prospect of slavery under white "promoters" on the other.

The work in the Asiatic countries is much the same as that outlined above for Africa. Ignorance, disease, and fanaticism are to be destroyed, and enlightenment, health, and the Christian Gospel to take their place.

TO GROW OUR OWN FIGS.

California Fruit Men to Enter Into Competition with the East.

Any one who has sailed the blue waters of the Mediterranean, no matter where, between Algeciras and Smyrna, must have brought back, most distinct among his mental records of the journey, a remembrance of fruit. It will not be of fruit neatly crated in orderly rows, standardized apples, oranges, or grapes scientifically developed out of all individuality, perfect to a fault and crying out by their very perfection their provenance from the highly commercialized model orchard or vineyard that one in imagination can see lying in endless tesselation, conducted by mathematical and chemical calculations and managed by salaried men for absentee or corporate ownership.

There, on the Mediterranean, we have no such vision but rather one of fruit luxury, of profusion, and of fruit character. We see no cityful of identical peaches, altered, perhaps a day later, to some other uniform, and uniformed fruitage arriving by trainload from distant fruit ranches. No, there the grapes and lemons, oranges and figs come in lesser lots but in more picturesque ways, by cart and mule pannier, by head-borne basket and by open boat—above all by open boat—rowed or sailed as the case may be by an olive-skinned native.

We, here in New Orleans, have just the faintest trace of this condition at the French Market during fig season or when the orange crop of the lower coast is being taken off, and there is a certain resemblance to be found in our Central American and Antillean tropics, though there we find the black element too dominant for the finer emotions aroused by the fruited shores of Spain, Italy, and the Levant.

Remembrance of these regions is aroused by the announcement that America is going after the fig growing business in rivalry with those lands of the East where growing and drying the ficus is as traditional as idleness on a saint's day and where, we may be sure, there will be no effort made to resist our invasion of the field and where it is safe to predict that the producer will know or care little about the overseas competition. Of course, he may suffer. The rich merchants who handle the crops as middlemen may force down the prices, but that will only be charged up to fatality, and the fig tree by the bell tower in the convent garden or the one leaning out from the cliff beside the one windowed stone cottage will go on producing its fruits of personality and of flavor.

The tens of thousands of acres of fig trees set out in the California irrigation districts will, of course, be made to produce an even larger and more attractive and more standardized fruit until, whether we buy in New Mexico or Maine, we will have no more surprise or uncertainty about our purchase than if we were investing in postage stamps. Doubtless there will be money in the business, the investment will be remunerative, and the perfection of the fruit unassailable; but still there will be something wanting. Is it purely imagination that those other fruits, produced in that other way, distribued in that more varied fashion, possess a different quality? Among the vineyards of France there are certain tiny hilltops which, through centuries of critical test, have been accepted as producing wines superlatively fine, but could that fact ever have been discovered if those grapes had been pressed indiscriminately with all those for miles around? Would not all have been reduced to a deadly level and would not the rare "crues" have been lost to the world; and also the appreciators of rare "crues"?

Yes, we have the finest and largest and most consistent and most uniformly colored and proportioned fruit in the entire world right here in America. We get it to market in the least time and in the best condition, but we do these things at a cost. That cost is the loss of individuality and flavor, the same attractions that are lost when handicraft gives way to multiple production and when individual thinking is supplanted by standardized thought drawn ready made from predigested magazines. Nature never fails to exact her price, whether from man or from fruit.—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

The "Original Bore."

Milton was the original bore. He had infinite capacity to befuddle, and his terminal facilities were crude and inadequate. Only one other character in history—Adam and Eve's angel child, Abel—was equally lacking in human interest.—Topeka Journal.

The Great Hot Spot Engine has made the Chalmers one of the few great cars of the world—

THIS great engine, which now has a record of many million miles behind it, has created a new movement in the automobile industry.

It has swung the attention from multi-cylinders, extra valves and the like to the subject of getting-the-very-last-bit-of-power-out-of-every-drop-of-gas.

For gas has gone down and down in grade; the price has gone up and up; and cars have not performed as once they did, while the public began to say "they weren't making cars as well as they used to."

The public was wrong. It was not the car. It was the low grade gas. The food for an engine had changed; a new digestive organ was needed.

Among the first to observe this condition were the Chalmers engineers. They were the first to supply the answer.

They designed a Hot Spot device and attached a new type of intake manifold now known as the famous Ram's-horn.

By means of the Hot Spot they cracked up, fine as powder, and heated the gas after it left the carburetor. This put the gas in perfect shape for combustion.

Now the task was to get this "fine as powder," or as the engineers say "dry gas" into the cylinders without letting it condense on the short 18-inch but hazardous journey. Gas is tricky.

They succeeded in designing a brand new type of canal or manifold—minus angles, corners, sharp corners and the like—and this they called the Ram's-horn.

A book might easily be written on the subject, for the Ram's-horn is one of the really great devices on a motor car—exclusive though it be on the Chalmers.

Any man who drives a Hot Spot Chalmers can tell you how wonderful these two devices work.

They have made the Chalmers now a great automobile. This is what they accomplish:

Almost immediate starting on a cold day.

Perfect engine running in 30 seconds on a cold day.

More power out of gas than has ever been extracted before.

Prevent raw gas from going past the pistons into the crank case and subsequent lubrication trouble.

Develop a smoother, softer kind of power.

Cause a lower upkeep cost through less vibration.

Spin more mileage out of every gallon.

Cause the engine to run cooler on a hot day.

There are many more.

A visit to the Chalmers exhibit at the automobile show will put you in touch with men who can answer any question about the Chalmers. Or, better still, bring you in touch probably with one of those 10,000 and more Hot Spot owners who will tell you that he has one of the few great cars of the world.

Send for the new Haynes catalog. It is beautifully descriptive

THE four factors of character of the preferred car are strength, beauty, power and comfort.

Nothing more can be asked. All you desire is to be assured that back of these is an organization with the ability and the determination to deliver them.

The history of the Haynes guarantees all this. The Haynes—America's first car—has twenty-six successful years back of it. During that period hundreds and hundreds of cars have been announced and forgotten, but the Haynes today is better known and better liked than ever.

Certainly the engineers and designers who present the new series Haynes have labored worthily. The Haynes engine itself has required only a few minor changes in four years. Now the chassis, the body, the great and small details, are in keeping with the motive power.

Today the Haynes is in greater demand than ever before in the more than a quarter of a century of its life. You may have a new series Haynes if you will be so good as to be prompt in ordering it.

DON'TS FOR MOTHERS WHOSE SONS RETURN

They Are Changed Young Men, Sometimes Not Polite, Sometimes Moody—Much Depends on the Home

This is a letter from an American mother to American mothers, giving them certain hints as to what they may expect of the changed young man who returns from France, and suggesting certain "Don'ts." Mrs. Gareissen writes from the Y. M. C. A. Officers' Club at Limoges, France. Her devoted work for American soldiers has won high praise from her associates.

To the American Mother: It is one thing to read of a big theatrical spectacle; it is quite another thing to be one of the audience, looking on—being a part of it. So it has been with this indescribable world tragedy. Because it has been impossible for the American mothers to be near at hand, as have the English and French women, I determined to return to the States ahead of the boys. It was my desire to talk with the mothers from a mother's point of view.

But Uncle Sam was too swift for me. He performed miracles—I can't. He can demobilize his army and pack it across the sea with the same speed that he raised that army. After the armistice was signed, troops began moving to ports before we had recovered our breath, and my plan of heart-to-heart talks with mothers seemed inadvisable, so much is there yet for the American woman to do in France. At the request of many sons, I am writing you this letter instead.

The boys agree with me that for several weeks after they get home you will spoil them outrageously. Then you will begin to wonder, and, having been so far away from the frightful scene, your wonder will increase.

Your sons are changed. They are going home, after these few but intense months, with an entirely different outlook on life. They came to France unsophisticated. They are returning the most worldly wise men of the earth. They have seen the nations, America included, as they are, not as they thought they were. (Nations as individuals show their real characters only under tremendous pressure.) War has failed to brutalize our American boys. They are as gentle and affectionate as when they left home—certainly they are more simple and unassuming. There is not much of the egotistical ego left. But there are other ways in which they are changed, less important perhaps, yet not trifling.

These modest, unassuming boys of ours, who dashed into the accursed German machine-gun nests as fearlessly as they would step out into the sunshine, have told me tales so harrowing I have turned faint and dizzy. Must not these ugly experiences have left a lasting mental influence?

I am sure you are prepared for a change in your sons, but they are more changed than their manner indicates. Of necessity they have learned to be pretty good actors. Therein lies a danger. All the stirring events of this great adventure have compelled our boys to think as they never thought before. They see life stripped of its veneer. They see conditions as they are, and they are not as they thought they were. And after the first burst of excitement at reaching America, and the joy of reunion with loved ones, reaction will set in.

Jack may make a fool of himself for the time being, while John may act like a man of 75. Don't fret and worry, thinking that war has ruined Jack. It hasn't. Be particularly gentle and considerate, making no comment on the lateness of the hour he comes in. Don't even ask him where he is spending his time; in short, don't ask a single embarrassing question. Bide your time. Instead of wondering, use your ingenuity in seeing wherein you can make home more attractive and comfortable. Keep flowers artistically arranged here and there, and study the best and latest cook book and serve the daintiest meals with spotless linen. Most of all, dress becomingly, just as you would for a lover—in truth, Jack is your lover-son returned, and he has been adoring you and longing for you as you can never realize.

As I said, the reaction with John may be entirely different from that of Jack. After John's delirium of joy, he may choose the most comfortable chair in the house, sink into it up to his ears, and sit and sit and sit, until you will consider getting a derrick to move him. Don't worry. Let him sit and talk and doze to his heart's content. Don't disturb him. Think of it. He has sat on boards, stones, and the ground all this while, and his bed has been as hard or worse than his seats. Perhaps never once may he have had a comfortable chair or a soft bed. He is tired through and through mentally, physically, and nervously. If he should dwell too much on the horrors of war, gently attract his attention to the flowers or the sunshine. (France may have been "Sunny France" before the war, but of late years the sky has been mostly covered with heavy clouds filled with women's tears.

If John shows a tendency to become a habitual "setter," as mny men have become after wars, find ways and means of weaning him gradually. Don't for the world let him know what you are up to, when you plan a little party for the movies with the chafing dish afterward, but plan amusement and entertainment. It's a delightful sensation for a woman to draw upon her feminine nature, and when your sons return you will have opportunities for self-development you have never had in all your life before. You know the Bible says a woman should be as subtle as a serpent and as harmless as a dove.

You may wonder sometimes that the son you brought up with such care can be so lax in manners. Don't forget that the Germans brought this war on the world. And don't forget that the boys have lived the lives of soldiers for over a year and a half, in a foreign country, away from the refinement of home, mother, sister, and sweetheart. With tact on your part he will unconsciously sooner or later again take on the external polish.

As I have been intimately among officers as much as with the soldiers, I am justified in saying that the only difference between them, taking them as a whole, is the uniform and Sam Browne belt. They are all American young men. (This condition does not exist in the other armies because of the large class of peasantry.) Officers as well as soldiers are going home different men. Many who came over, never having given much thought to religion or the Golden Rule, are going back deeply religious, with definite ideas and ideals. Others who came over, religious in the orthodox way, are mystified and full of uncertainty and doubt. Many have become fatalists, which, I think, is more unfortunate than uncertainty. All alike are in a transitional state of mind, and this, in addition to the reaction that is bound to set in, and their re-establishment in business, will make life none too easy for a time.

Of course you will be absorbed and thrilled with the war stories, but after you have heard them a hundred times or more they will cease to haunt you. You have not been in the tragedy. Make up your mind to listen patiently to these stories so long as you live. The experiences have been too ghastly for the boys to forget. The remembrance of them will always cling.

In a letter it is impossible to go into descriptions and I have purposely made no reference to the weary waits for letters from you, the homesickness, nor the climax of all the hardships and suffering—the actual fighting; nor have I gone into the agony and superhuman fortitude with which I have come in contact in our big hospitals nor to those who are returning to you crippled and disfigured.

With utter disregard, our sons have given themselves for a noble cause. This shocking, monstrous four years' war is ended before the most optimistic had hoped because of their sacrifice. The noblest, grandest, and most definite work ever undertaken by women is now beginning, and it is my hope that in some way I may help—no matter how small my part may be.

The Honorable Mrs. Lyttleton, one of the most advanced of English thinking women, (and quite the most charming person I have ever met,) said in an address which she made in Paris last August: "Woman's work has not yet really begun; that will begin in the reconstruction of home life, after the men return."

The task of the English and French women is simple compared to that of the American women. They have been over here. They have not gotten their information from newspapers and magazines. They have seen the tragedy, while the American women have been denied even the privilege of receiving natural letters from their sons, so rigid has the censoring been.

If you had been in France you would not be in the least surprised if the son you brought up with such exquisite care wipes his mouth with his hand while eating dinner. Napkins are not provided at war and the use of the hand has become a habit. More than likely he may forget at times, and leave the table abruptly, chewing the last mouthful. At war our boys have eaten only to live, not from pleasure, and if you could have seen the war service you would not have wondered that they left as quickly as possible.

Last week a particularly refined young officer urged me to dine with him because he was homesick. Although by nature I am certain he is considerate and thoughtful he made more than one slip. Toward the end of the meal he filled his glass with water, and as he set the water bottle down he noticed my empty glass. His face flushed and his eyes grew moist as he quietly said, "Do you think I will ever recover my manners?" I speak of this not because it is an unusual case, but a common one. With all their bravery, these men are very sensitive and they must never be teased, not even if they throw cigarette butts and ashes from one end of the house to the other, as some of them will do. If you have twenty ash trays in a room don't be shocked to find them unused. It may happen, and it will be an interesting task for you to overcome these war habits.

During these months that I have been in charge of the Y. M. C. A. Officers' Club I have learned lots, for my guests have been mostly wounded men. These tired warriors of ours want to make no effort. They do not want to be bothered. They do want entertainment. Most of all they want music. Their pleasure in it is pathetic.

Unless they show a tendency to take an active part in frivolity, do not urge them. Plan wholesome entertainment for them. Watch carefully the effect, but, of course, they must not dream you are trying anything out on them. This mental nursing, for that is what they need, will interest you very much, and before you know it you will have the boy his old self again.

I am almost tempted to have a list of "Don'ts" printed for the American women, to hang in the hallway so the boys will be sure the instant they enter the home door that certain dishes will never again be inflicted upon them. Let them know at once that stews are abolished forever. So many "stews" have they been forced to eat, their name for it is "slum." The very though of "slum" contracts their stomachs. Canned salmon; (alias goldfish,) corned beef, (alias monkey meat, corn Willy, red horse, and bully beef,) are equally nauseating, as are hash, oatmeal, and beans. Bread pudding is another despised dish. The artillerymen call it "artillery pudding." They say after the K. P. cleans the mess kitchen, the cook uses anything and everything for the mixture that the K. P. has gathered up. They have turned against carrots and rice, too, with good reason. I went with a Colonel not long ago to the Haviland factories to help him select some china for his wife. As we looked about, I spied a pretty and unusual dish. The Colonel admired it, too, so I asked Mr. Haviland what it was for. The answer came, "It is a rice dish." The Colonel turned quickly, actually nauseated, as he said, "If my wife ever serves me rice, I'll leave home." The thought came to me, if Colonels feel so, how must buck privates feel?

At the risk of being considered preachy I am going to caution you against repeating trifling incidents to the boys. Everything sinks into insignificance compared to the tragedy in France. We over here know how this Englishman felt when on his leave. After he returned to the front a comrade asked him if his wife was thrilled with the experiences he had had. "I didn't tell her about them," said the soldier. "Didn't tell her; why?" broke in his pal. "I didn't get a chance, she was so busy tellin' me all the news about Mrs. Bally's cat killin' Mrs. Smith's bird, and Mrs. Cramp's sister's new dress, and how Jimmy Murphy's dog chewed up Annie Allen's doll, an'—all such things." It is human nature to want to tell our experiences first, but nothing that has happened in America can compare with what has happened in France, so keep your stories until the boys have told you all of theirs. They will begin to ask questions then.

And don't let Mrs. Beaucoup Franc-Jones persuade you to bring your hero, with his "distinguished service cross," to her dinner party to entertain her guests. Many are dreading this very thing. Men who have gone through the deepest passes of hell and stood at the edge of life, looking through into the Great Unknown, cannot endure much that smacks of artificiality.

Although America is made up of people of every country in Europe, we are unlike any of them. We have melted into a very definite nation. From this vantage point, that which strikes me most forcibly is the spirituality of America. It permeates the very air. Whether or not they realize it, these sons of ours, who had to drop careers and everything to turn warriors temporarily, have highly developed spiritual natures. This accounts for much, of which I wish I might write, but my letter is too long as it is. Is it not most beautiful to think to what heights our sons have risen? They have more than honored us. Let our prayer in the future be, "God make me worthy of him."

MABEL FONDA GAREISSEN.

NOVEL CASES IN THE COURTS

The Supreme Court of Kansas decided an interesting question arising from the provision in the Constitution of that State whereby aliens who have declared their intention of becoming citizens shall have the right to vote. The question embraced the effect of this provision on Germans and Austrians who had taken out their first papers and registered for an election to be held in Topeka. In denying their right to vote the court said:

"One owing allegiance to an adverse belligerent and who is actually hostile is subject to internment and to deportation. It is clear, therefore, that our constitutional provision purporting to confer political rights on aliens does not apply to a class of aliens upon whom political rights cannot be conferred. It is too much to infer that the makers of our Constitution intended to adopt a rule that conflicted with the Federal Constitution and law, or to enter into political relations with enemies of our country who are endeavoring to destroy our institutions. It certainly was not intended that people at war with us should have authority to select a Congress which is empowered to declare war and provide for carrying it on, and also help elect the President and other officers who direct the war officers to whom the conduct of our national affairs and the integrity of the country are intrusted. The term 'alien,' as ordinarily used, is applied to that class who have recognized rights in this country, and with whom friendly relations may be established."

The case of Willits's estate before the California Supreme Court was a contest of the will of a man who died at the age of 88 years, leaving small bequests to five adult children and giving the residue to a woman Spiritualist companion who had obtained $85,000 from him during his lifetime. The opinion in the case said: "From 1902 to 1907 Mr. Willits spent the major portion of his time with a Mrs. Green, who resided in Chicago. 'Mrs. Green was a medium, and séances were held at her house. With Mr. Willits's assistance she was developing a higher order of Spiritualism, known as the "Magi." The members of this society of Magi called to their aid in their troubles over mundane affairs the spirits of the ancient Atlantians, who had their earthly residence upon the now submerged continent of Atlantis. Mr. Willits's especial 'guide' or 'control' during this period was an Atlantian spirit called 'Billy.' Mr. Willits was confirmed in his devotion by a communication which he received from Mr. Burdick, whom he had known on earth, and who had 'passed over'; Mr. Burdick telling him that the $5,000 which he had loaned for the development of Spiritualism was the best investment he (Mr. Burdick) had ever made, the reason being, as Mr. Burdick's spirit explained, that, when he 'passed over,' because of this loan the 'spirits in the other world had met him and taken good care of him and fixed him up right.' Mr. Willits's own exposition upon this subject was that the more you did for Spiritualism in this world the better off you were with the spirits in the next world, and he instanced the case of a friend of his, William Drury by name. William Drury in his lifetime had done nothing for Spiritualism, and when he 'passed over' he was left in 'outer darkness,' the spirits did not receive him very well, and he did not get along with them, but, being informed of this, he, Mr. Willits, got in communication with them and fixed it up so that now 'Mr. Drury was doing fairly well.'"

The court in holding the will void said: "It would be a serious reflection upon the intelligence of the profession if space should be given to a discussion of the sufficiency or insufficiency of this evidence to support the verdict. It speaks so positively and convincingly as to require no comment."

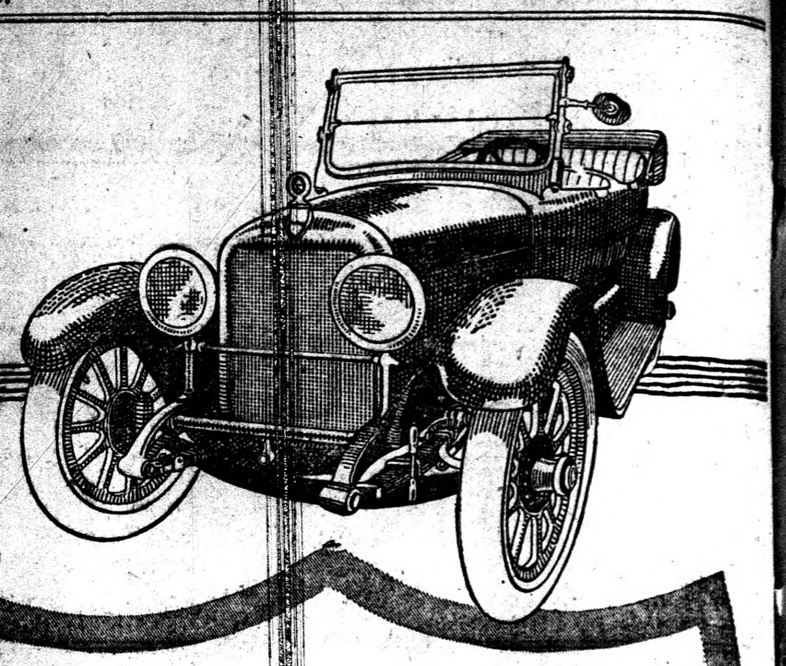
A storekeeper's gently laying his hands on a customer who refuses, upon request, to desist from helping himself to goods for which he does not intend to pay, and leading him out of the store, is held not to constitute an assault, in Raefeldt v. Koenig, 152 Wis. 459, 140 N. W. 56.

The Supreme Court of Texas in Arce vs. State, which arose out of the Mexican revolution, has held that a soldier is not answerable in a civil court for killing an enemy soldier in a battle in which he was directed to engage by his superior officer.

Producing unconsciousness by means of a drug for the purpose of obtaining money in custody of the person rendered unconscious is held an exercise of force within the meaning of the statute against robbery, in the Nevada case of State v. Snyder, 172 Pac. 364.

False statements of fact affecting the character of candidates for public office are held not privileged, in Pattangall v. Mooers, 113 Me. 412, 94 Atl. 561, although made in good faith, with an honest belief in their truth, to persons interested in the subject matter of the statements, if the authority for the statements is not given.

In suit against railroad for killing blooded pointer dog, evidence showing there was no market for such dogs in a particular town, court should have permitted jury to consider testimony as to value of dog in other places wherein owner might find purchaser.—Greenwald v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., Miss., 76 So. 557.



He drives it himself

THE owner of a thoroughbred horse drives it himself because he loves horses and the pleasure of ownership is largely the pleasure of driving.

The sort of man that buys a Mercer is the sort of man that loves a car.

The Mercer is a car that gives a thrill of pleasure to the man or woman who drives it.

It is because it is willing, eager and gentle.

Willing because it will perform any task you call upon it to do.

Eager because it has the power, the quick pick-up, the responsiveness that you love to feel as you step on the throttle.

Gentle because, with all its power and capability for speed, it is smooth, quiet, and flexible in its control.

The Mercer is limited in its output—many will be disappointed this year. Those who succeed in getting one will be the ones who order early.

New Mitchell Sixes

50% More Strength
75% More Endurance
25% More Economy

New Victory Model

With More Than 100 Improvements

We celebrate this first post-war Show with a completely new Mitchell Six.

Two years have been spent in its development, including all those war months when the Mitchell plant built trucks.

It is not merely a new model. It is new in standards, new in principles. It creates a new criterion in this class.

There are more than 100 important improvements. Nearly every part and detail shows distinct advances.

The average strength increase is 50 per cent. There is 75 per cent. more endurance, 25 per cent. more economy, 20 per cent. added beauty and comfort.

To Meet the New Ideas

This car is built to meet today's requirements. The call is now for stronger, more enduring cars.

The Light Six type has been too light. The general standards have not been high enough. The years have proved that to makers who face facts.

Two years ago we decided to revise those standards, regardless of all rivals. We brought in many new specialists to help.

The result is this new Mitchell Six. It is finished before we expected, because war-time lull gave our engineers an unusual opportunity.

A Complete Revision

This car means a complete revision of all standards in this type.

Scientific tests, made part by part, show a strength increase of 50 per cent. It includes larger parts, better heat treatments, higher grades of steels. There are 123 drop forgings.

Operating cost is reduced 25 per cent. This by saving power waste, by using a thermostat on the water system, and by completely vaporizing the gasoline.

The body is new, in design, color and finish, in top and equipment, in luxury and room.

A Surprising Price

You will see in this car over 100 such advances, each of which adds value. You will see scores of ways in which it excels any other car in this class. Yet the price is below any comparable Six.

This is the greatest example of factory efficiency which Mitchell has ever exhibited. We build the complete car—motor, chassis and body—in a plant long famous for its scientific methods. And all these improvements are paid for by those savings.

TO SOLVE PROBLEMS OF RECONSTRUCTION

Abram I. Elkus, Appointed by Governor Whitman to Head Commission, Discusses Arduous Work Ahead

DEMOCRACY is in the air. Nothing has been talked about so much during the war as democracy. The returning soldier wants to know how much of this democracy he is actually going to experience. A great many people and organizations think that they can help give it to him. People were never so ready for changes; the time was never so ripe for doing things that will benefit humanity. But these aspirations, these hopes, these desires have to be translated into practical plans and formulated into effective legislation.

"That sums up the work of the Reconstruction Commission. This is a time of maladjustments, of flexible and fluid public opinion, a time when sections of the community are ready for the worst remedies, and others are praying for the best. That is why the commission was one of the Governor's first creations and why the members have plunged into the work resolved that results shall come as soon as it is humanly possible to bring them about."

Thus did Abram I. Elkus, lawyer, man of affairs, and the choice of the Governor for the difficult task of resolving into a possible orderly program the present chaotic social complex, explain the purposes of the Reconstruction Commission. The personnel of the commission is varied, ranging from capitalist to labor leader, from conservative to Socialist, from farmer to factory owner.

"That is my conception of the work of the commission," said Mr. Elkus as he looked up from a pile of communications and smiled quizzically. "There are other conceptions, as these letters prove. There is the man who wrote to the Governor: 'Before I held my present job I was an architect and builder. I would like to be on the Reconstruction Commission.' Who could reconstruct better than an architect and builder? Then there is the man who appears at the office of the commission and informs you that, from all he has read in the newspapers, he believes that the commission was intended only to reconstruct disabled soldiers. He goes on to state that he has a complete vocation and education plan and that he knows just how the entire problem of rehabilitating the soldiers can be successfully carried out.

"The man who comes in and applies for a job as a building inspector on the buildings that are to be reconstructed by the commission, because he believes that it was intended only to finish the buildings begun by the Federal Government, is perhape no further off than the one who writes the Governor that all he and his brother need and ask of the commission to make them happy is a comfortable farm where they can make a living. He states naively enough that they failed to do that very thing with the farm they had, and that they are now residents somewhere in the wilds of Brooklyn.

"Taking as a basis the Governor's statement that the State can be no better than the people who live in it, we have the foundation upon which the commission must build. Everything that will democratically foster sound bodies in the men, women, and children, bodies that will be fertile seed grounds for intellectual, social, and vocational development, and everything that wil make for a wage commensurate with a proper standard of living, everything that will make for such working conditions as will enable men and women to work happily and live wholesomely—in short, everything that will contribute to the welfare of the citizens of the State—will be among the ends sought by the commission.

"The commission sees life and a social program as a whole, and not as a series of disjointed programs of specialists. If we are to have efficient workmen, we must have healthy workmen, and their health must be the result of a sound health education. They must be protected from industrial disease, and they must earn wages that will enable them to provide comfortably for their families and have the assurance that death or disability will not leave wife and children public charges. Such men and their families must be housed, fed, clothed, and socially protected by the State. The children must have the opportunity to grow up in a better world, with a better physical chance for meeting the drafts upon them.

"Legislatures are made up of busy people. A thousand things press upon them for attention, individually and collectively. It is difficult for the lawmaker to distinguish between one man's program and the next. It is hard for him to know when a project is presented by some one who has an axe to grind, and, above all, it is almost impossible, for political reasons, to avoid grinding axes.

"An unpaid body, such as the Reconstruction Commission, can have no political axes to grind. In it are represented many shades of political opinion. There are Democrats, Republicans, Socialists, independents. They can obtain from all kinds of citizens of the State opinions and reactions that are unbiased and that speak the truth. And, because the commission is unpaid and represents no one political combination, it is more likely than any specific legislative group to be able to distinguish the projects of disinterested parties from others. Unless its recommendations both to the Governor and to the Legislature always have the earmarks of disinterestedness they will be worthless.

"Many fields of activity are represented on the commission. The Governor must have consciously striven for such a variety in making the appointments. The body will not get only the lawyer's power of formulation and his clarifying point of view, but will add to those desirable qualities the business man's ability to make programs practical and sane. Added to these are the more diversified interests of the academic thinkers and the close-range practicality of the labor representatives. Then there are the women, who will contribute much that is sensible and direct in its relation to the life of the people.

"Professor Adler has pointed out that, if each of the individuals on the commission begins to contend for first principles as he sees them—the educator for his, the labor representative for his, the lawyer for his—the body will soon reach an impasse, and will get no further than an unsuccessful attempt to harmonize these principles, whereas, if all of these types of mind are applied to practical solutions of the problems that come before the commission, they will all contribute an illuminating fund of thought which can be clarified and analyzed as the commission proceeds further with its work.

"Many problems have been referred to the commission for solution, and it has therefore been necessary to create a number of committees to deal individually and intensively with them. Such a problem is the projected vehicular tunnel to connect New York and New Jersey. Before asking the Legislature to make an appropriation for it the Governor wishes the advice of the commission because he feels that it can quietly obtain information from impartial sources in such a manner that the advice will be convincing both to himself and the Legislature.

"The Committee on Education will immediately proceed to inquire into the operation of the Military Training law. It will hear all shades of opinion concerning the advisability of the continuation of the present system or its repeal. It will hear those who are directly concerned with the operation of the law, those who favor military training, those who do not, educators who either believe in the system or who do not believe in it. The committee will probably examine into the results of the questionnaire recently filled out by young men between the ages of 16 and 19 as a preliminary to the inauguration of the system. This committee will also go into the details of the various programs of Americanization proposed both by social agencies and public school systems of the State Department of Education.

"The proposals in the Soldiers' Settlement act, drafted by the Department of the Interior, have also been referred to the commission, and will be acted upon by the Committee on Food Production and Distribution. It may be that, in working out this system of resettlement, if returning soldiers can be induced to go back to the land, a solution of some of the agricultural and dairy problems of the State may eventually be found. Here, perhaps, lies the real solution of the milk problem. With such a system of subsidized agriculture the State can encourage scientific farming and dairying, and the unproductive cow, which seems to be responsible for many of our milk troubles, may become a thing of the past.

"The Committee on Taxation and Retrenchment has, of course, the most pressing and delicate piece of work ahead of it. It will need all the help that experts can give it. Not only is it necessary that this committee assist in finding new sources of revenue for the State by giving consideration to all who have plans to offer, but it will endeavor to discover whether administrative methods can be so changed that a curtailment of expenditures may be brought about. If this should prove to be so, recommendations for such curtailment will come with better grace from an impartial group, unfettered by political alliances, than from either of the dominant parties, whether in power at present or not.

"From the Housing Committee the Governor hopes eventually to receive a definite constructive plan that will solve the housing problems of the State for some years to come. Careful inquiry will be made into the status of the Government's building operations, begun during the war, and in many cases now abandoned. Wherever these are within the State particular attention will be paid to their further adaptation and use. Some of the great industrial plants of the State are deeply interested in the development of the housing plans, and have already assured the commission of a desire to co-operate along these lines.

"After careful inquiry into the facts, should the Committee on Unemployment arrive at the conviction that it is necessary to accelerate the building of public works, it will, of course, have to select those that will be of the greatest permanent benefit to the commonwealth as well as most adaptable to the situation. If unemployment should prove to exist largely among clerical helpers and other types of men unsuited to manual labor of any kind, the digging of tunnels and subways will only aggravate the situation. If the greatest need is among the building trades, it may be most worth while to begin the construction of State hospitals. Judgment and quick adaptability to a specific situation will be needed in solving this problem.

"Then, again, it may turn out that the greatest need for employment will be found among women. In that case, special plans will have to be devised to meet the situation.

"The necessity for co-operation with the reconstruction bodies of other States is apparent in the textile situation, into which the commission has begun an inquiry. The manufacturers in this State find their actions determined in part by those of the manufacturers in other States. The eight-hour law cannot compete with a ten-hour law across the State boundary. So we shall have to get together. There can be no unbridled competition between States.

"Of offers of assistance there has been no lack. From all kinds of organizations, both public and private, we have had expressions of good-will and practical support. For instance, the Art Alliance of America offers its plan for the development of industrial art education, the wholesale grocers offer the same kind of co-operation that they gave the Food Administration, and the Empire State Gas and Electric Association says it can employ disabled soldiers. Others from whom we have heard are the City Club, the Charity Organization Society, the Highways Transport Company, the Council of National Defense, the State Conservation Commission, the American Association for Labor Legislation, the Wall Street Women's Club, and the Department of Labor.

"It has been suggested that a commission with no plenary powers cannot function, but the commission believes that, having been appointed by the Governor, its friendly attitude, constructive aim, and absolute disinterestedness in finding the best, will secure for it the necessary co-operation in State departments, in the Legislature, and in private organizations. But certainly the Governor will not rest content until the recommendations of the commission are given the closest consideration, and every possible effort is made to give them effectiveness."

British and French production for October and the first part of November was estimated at the same rate as the preceding three months. Ammunition figures for the United States include ball cartridges cal. .30, and 8 mm. of service, incendiary, armor-piercing, and tracer types. Since the need for the original equipment of troops no longer existed, French and British production of rifles during 1918 was at a lower rate than had previously been attained.

MURDERS ARE FEW IN CITY NOWADAYS

Interesting Cases of Crime Are Far Between, and Publicity Has Declined in the War Period

THE people who went down the subway stairs at the northwest corner of Forty-second Street and Seventh Avenue on their way home Monday evening heard, if they chanced to notice it, a long unfamiliar sound. The newsboy there was calling the night extras, as usual, but he was not challenging the crowd's attention with his usual cry. Out into Times Square he sent his raucous notes to a strange tune, a call that has probably not been used to sell papers on the New York streets for years, a call that was once the best-known of all newsboy urgings.

"All about that murder!" the newsboy said.

He said nothing else. And the point of this story lies not only in the fact that a newsboy was calling "that murder," but that his hearers knew what he meant. It had been fairly buried in the back pages of nearly all the morning papers, and given scant space in most, but the story of the woman's body found on the Palisades the day before had begun to catch the public's attention by Monday night. And as the effort at identification went on, as clues were mentioned and discarded and darkly hinted at again, until the mystery was finally solved and the sad story told, that grewsome discovery on the Palisades continued to hold the attention of people in New York City, while varying reports continued to come out of Russia, and the question of the German colonies was brought up at Versailles.

Said Second Deputy Police Commissioner William J. Lahey, who is in charge of the Detective Bureau and the general chief of the Homicide Bureau at Police Headquarters: "It looks as if people were beginning to be interested in murders again." It happens that in this case the "murder" was probably a case of suicide. But the point is that the public thought it was a murder and was interested in the story of it, after years during which such news was not much "played up."

Deputy Commissioner Lahey does not conceal the fact that public interest in murders is a thing to be welcomed at Police Headquarters. Public interest in a mystery helps to clear the mystery, And newspaper publicity, of which homicide has had so little in the last four and a half years, is a recognized aid in the apprehension of a criminal.

"There's been mighty little newspaper space given to accounts of murders since the European war began," Mr. Lahey said. "Of course the papers have had so much other news to fill their columns that such things were just crowded out, or condensed to the smallest possible space. It stands to reason, too, that people weren't so much interested in crimes when there was all the war news to read.

"But on the other hand, not many people are interested in murders simply as murders. If a man kills another man in a quarrel, it does not arouse much excitement outside the immediate locality where it occurred. What the public is interested in is not just some one's being killed, or the committing of a crime of violence. Public interest is aroused, and held, by mystery. If a case has sensational, strange or romantic elements people follow it with a lot of interest—that is, it's a psychological thing that they want to read about, not, as I said, just a killing of some one by some one else.

"Publicity results in people's turning up clues, in volunteered information, in suggestions that are likely to be very helpful. In a case where the initial mystery of identification is to be solved wide public interest is sometimes effective in reaching a solution that would otherwise not have been reached, or not reached so soon. Often when the mystery of identification is cleared up the main problem is solved—as in the Palisades case that proved not to be a murder at all.

"Of course it is obvious that wide interest and publicity may sometimes defeat the pursuit of the criminal—in other words, he may be warned and get away. But that doesn't happen so often as you might think—in fact, it rarely happens. For the information that would get in the way of running down the criminal is almost never published.

"We have two unusual murder mysteries on our books now. One is a barrel murder in Brooklyn; the body of a man was found cut up in a barrel. That is the kind of murder which was probably committed by a foreigner. It has aroused little interest outside the locality where it occurred. The other is better known; it is the case of the 17-year-old girl who was murdered on her way home from work—the Riddell case. That is a very strange case. The girl was attacked and murdered 100 feet from her own home, in the early evening; not only was it early, it was moonlight as well. After she was killed her body was dragged into a lot within twenty feet of a house. Yet no one saw her or her murderer, heard a sound, or even discovered the body until the next morning. She did not cry out, apparently—doctors think that her skull was fractured at once by a blow from behind, and that she died instantly without being able to scream. The only clue was a B. R. T. ticket found under the girl's body.

"I don't remember a murder in this city that has been really sensational since the Rosenthal case. While the war is undoubtedly responsible for the lack of interest in murder cases in the last four years, it is true, I think, that in New York there does not seem to be so much interest in murders as there was fifteen or twenty years ago. I think it is simply that the city has grown and that more has been happening—many kinds of [illegible] any murder is exciting and interesting, and to a certain extent that was the case years ago in New York. But it has not been so for a long, long time."

The number of murders in New York City has been markedly decreasing, until the figure for the last year is only a little more than half the figure of less than ten years ago. In 1918 there were 215 cases of homicide in the city; in 1909 the number was 401. The figure for 1917 was 255. The records are not kept many years back, but the 1909 figure is said to be a fair average for the early years of the century.

"About 400 murders a year there were in those days," said Captain Donovan of the Lost Property Bureau, who has those records in charge. "That average kept up for two or three years after 1909. Then the enforcement of the Sullivan law brought the figure down. After a while people began to get pistols by going over to Jersey, and there was a little jump again. But for the last few years the figure has been low, and now it has struck a low level.

"Most of the murders nowadays are the outcome of quarrels between hotheaded foreigners or among gangsters of one kind or another; a few are the result of [illegible] quarrels. The number of murders that have any real human interest is small."

"Statistics show," said Second Deputy Commissioner Lahey, "that in the matter of murders conditions are better in our city than in any large city in the country. We mean that in proportion to the population there are fewer homicides here. Moreover, conditions are constantly improving. When you consider the number of homicides to population you can see how great the decrease has been."

He was asked about the report, in connection with the Palisades mystery, that there were more than 300 records of girls and women missing on the police books of this city at present.

"That is about the usual figure," he said, "and it does not mean anything sensational. Many of these girls and women are not missing from New York homes, but are reported to the New York police because they may have come to New York. Most of them have simply left home to take new jobs or something of the sort, and they let their families know their whereabouts. There is nothing really wrong in most of the cases."

TO STRIP BUDGET OF ITS MYSTERIES

AN automatic method to enable any citizen to tell how many new jobs a city administration might desire to slip into the annual budget, how many boosts in salary were planned for "the faithful," what important or unimportant positions or governmental activities it was desired to create or abolish, is provided for in a bill to be introduced soon into the State Legislature, originated by the Citizens Union. The bill is an amendment to Section 226 of the Greater New York Charter.

At present changes made in the budget as it progresses from one stage to another cannot be ascertained quickly. Because of the form of printing the documents involved, detection of changes requires many hours if not days, of laborious comparison. The proposed bill would not only abolish this operation, but it would, within certain reasonable limitations, make accessible to the public all the proceedings in the preparation of the budget.

"Not only will this bill serve the convenience of the people of the city in opening up the process of budget-making to their gaze, but it will be the means of saving them many thousands of dollars through the automatic detection of new and costly jobs on their payroll," said Leonard Wallstein in discussing the bill. He is counsel for the Citizens Union, and framed the measure.

"The preparation of the city budget goes through three major stages, each of which is represented by the publication of a large volume of perhaps 450 pages. These three stages include the preparation of the tentative budget, the preparation of the proposed budget, and that of the final budget. Preliminary to the first stage a departmental estimate showing the various positions in each department, together with their salaries and the omission of positions deemed unnecessary and the inclusion of those it is desired to create, is submitted to the Board of Estimate.

"The tentative budget is made up from the estimates sent to the Board of Estimate by the various department heads. Now notice. At present, when the tentative budget is published, it contains merely the names of the positions together with one line showing the salary called for by the tentative budget.

"In order to learn what changes have been made between the filing of the departmental estimates and the publication of the tentative budget, a comparison must be made between the thousands and thousands of items in the departmental estimates and the corresponding ones in the tentative budget.

"The next stage of the making of the budget is the preparation of the proposed budget. This is also published in a similar volume, each item with one line to show the salary under the proposed budget.

"The last stage is the adoption of the final budget. A similar volume of items is then published.

"However, between any two of these changes in the budget, additions, omissions, or substitutions of importance might be made with little fear of timely detection because of the great labor involved in ferreting out the changes. By increasing an employe's salary, adding a new position or abolishing an old one, the taxpayers might be burdened with payment for political sinecures or they might have to go without an appropriation or with a decreased appropriation for a much-needed work. Manipulation is easy.

"Under the proposed amendment the first stage, that of the tentative budget, would show not only the amount of money desired for each position in the tentative budget, but alongside would also appear the departmental estimate and the amount the position was provided in the previous year's budget. For example, here is an item, printed in the first stage of the budget as it would appear if this bill is enacted into law:

	1918. Budget.	1919. Departmental Estimate.	1919. Tentative Budget.
Consulting engineer	$7,200	$7,200	$7,200

"Here are two sample lines showing the creation of one new position and the abolishing of an old one:

	1918. Budget.	1919. Departmental Estimate.	1919. Tentative Budget.
Stenographer..	...	$1,260	$1,240
Draftsman	$2,280	...	...

"The budget of 1918 did not call for a stenographer and typewriter, and this is shown by a glance at the item. It is also obvious in the second item that the position has been abolished.

"Here is the provision for a position carried through the proposed budget:

	1918. Budget.	1919. Departmental Estimate.	1919. Tentative Budget.	1919. Proposed Budget.
Confidential inspector	$1,800	$2,500	$2,300	$2,500

"This is how the position would be indicated in the last stage, in the final budget:

	1918. Budget.	1919. Departmental Estimate.	1919. Tentative Budget.	1919. Proposed Budget.	1919. Final Budget.
Confidential inspector.......	$1,800	$2,500	$2,300	$2,500	$2,500

"Through the line-by-line comparison it was learned that when the proposed 1919 budget was under way there had been slipped into it, among others, the following positions which were not mentioned in the tentative budget and some of which were not even contained in the departmental estimates: A confidential inspector in the Department of Public Markets, $1,800; a water register inspector in the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, $3,500; two assistant engineers in the Department of Water Supply, $3,060 and $2,700.

"Similarly the proposed budget for the first time contained provisions for the increase of the salaries of a deputy controller from $7,500 to $8,500; a confidential inspector in the office of the Bronx Borough President from $2,300 to $2,500; the private secretary to the Commissioner of Correction from $2,340 to $2,500; the secretary to the Commissioner of Health from $3,000 to $3,500; a superintendent of telegraphy in the Police Department from $4,000 to $4,500; a clerk in the Department of Water Supply from $3,300 to $3,750, and an assistant engineer in the same department from $4,000 to $5,000.

"The condition of the present city budget is paralleled in the State budget.

"The proposed amendment provides that all departmental estimates shall be published in the City Record not later than Sept. 20. At present there is no provision requiring the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to print the departmental estimates in the City Record or elsewhere. As a matter of custom, however, these estimates have been printed in the City Record. In the absence of any specific legal requirement or time limit, this publication is sometimes too late to be of any assistance or value to the public.

"The proposed amendment also provides that all sessions and meetings of the Board of Estimate and of any committee, subcommittee or representative of the board, at which the department estimate, the tentative budget, or the proposed budget 'shall be the subject of consideration shall be duly announced as to the date, time, and place thereof by publication in the City Record and shall be open to the public.'

"Some attempt was made during the consideration of the 1919 budget to have sessions open to the public other than those now required by law to be open. The result, however, was unsuccessful.

"The policy of holding secret sessions on a matter of such public concern as the budget, where nothing of a confidential nature need be divulged, should not receive even the implied sanction of the Legislature. The same considerations that lead the committee to have occasional open sessions when departmental heads are present should make it incumbent upon the committee to have its meetings public as well as when it discusses the budget without the presence of these officials."

COPPER PRODUCTION.

THE production of copper in the United States in 1918 was slightly larger than in 1917, according to preliminary figures and estimates collected by B. S. Butler of the United States Geological Survey. At an average price of about 24.75 cents a pound, the output for 1918 has a value of $473,000,000, as against values of $510,000,000 for 1917 and $190,000,000 for 1913. The return in 1918 was smaller owing to Federal price-fixing.

The figures showing the smelter production from domestic ores represent the actual output of most of the companies for the first eleven months of the year and the estimated output for December. A few companies gave no figures for November, but supplied estimates of the combined output of November and December. The production of blister and lake copper from domestic ores was 1,910,000,000 pounds in 1918, against 1,886,000,000 pounds in 1917 and 1,224,000,000 pounds in 1913.

The supply of refined copper (electrolytic, lake, casting, and pig) from primary sources, domestic and foreign, for 1918 is estimated at 2,450,000,000 pounds, compared with 2,362,000,000 pounds for 1917 and 1,615,000,000 pounds for 1913.

According to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the imports of copper in all forms for the first eleven months of 1918 amounted to 535,868,000 pounds, against 556,000,000 pounds for the twelve months of 1917.

The exports of pigs, ingots, bars, plates, sheets, rods, wire, and like copper products for the first eleven months of 1918, as determined by the same bureau, amounted to 692,759,000 pounds; the exports for the twelve months of 1917 were 1,126,082,000 pounds.

At the beginning of 1918 about 114,000,000 pounds of refined copper was in stock in the United States. Adding this quantity to the refinery output of the year shows that the total available supply of refined copper was about 2,564,000,000 pounds. Subtracting from this total the exports for the first eleven months and the estimated exports for the last month shows, on the assumption that there was no change in stocks, that the supply available for domestic consumption in 1918 was considerably more than the 1,316,000,000 pounds available in 1917.

The New York Times:

The half-page advertisement "An Export Message to Manufacturers," published through our advertising agency, Medley Scovil, Inc., in The New York Times and which was also run in six newspapers in other cities, produced more than twice as many inquiries from The Times as from all the other newspapers combined.

It is proof of a very live and high class circulation.

At millions of American breakfasts Aunt Jemima Pancakes are now served in place of meat or eggs —and these delicious cakes cost only one-third as much as eggs or meat!

The breakfast your family likes best—the one that's quickest and easiest to get—the one that is also the most economical!

For Aunt Jemima Pancakes, filling and nourishing as they are—cost only one-third as much as eggs or meat!

You need no milk! It's in the flour

The reason Aunt Jemima Pancakes are so inexpensive, so easy to make, is because everything is already in the flour. Even the sweet milk is powdered and mixed in. You just add water—and in two minutes the steaming, fragrant cakes are on the table. And how good they taste!

La-May Face Powder Is Pure!

No White Lead—No Rice Powder
It Really Stays On Unusually Well.

Up to the present time it has been almost impossible to get a face powder to stay on longer than it takes to put it on. You powder your nose nicely and the first gust of wind or the first puff of your handkerchief and away goes the powder, leaving your nose red, shiny and conspicuous, probably just at the very moment when you would give anything to appear at your best. A specialist has at last perfected a pure powder that women say stays on wonderfully well. It does not contain white lead or starchy rice powder (Poudre de Riz) to make it stay on. White lead poisons the skin and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that encourages enlarged pores and unsightly complexions. This improved formula contains a medicinal powder doctors use to heal the skin. In fact, this new powder helps to prevent and reduce enlarged pores and irritations. It is called La-may (French, Poudre L'Amé). Because it is pure and because it stays on so well, it is already sold everywhere. The large size is only fifty cents and the trial size is twenty-five cents. When you use this delightful La-may and see how wonderfully it beautifies your complexion, you will understand why it is now used by over a million American women.

The Literary Digest for January 18, 1919

TRAINED men were withdrawn from every line to put the country on a war basis, and the re-adjustment will necessarily be a long one. The seed trade has been no exception to the rule; hence we urge our customers to send in their orders at once, before the Spring rush begins. It will be a vast help to us in doing our part in feeding the country to be able to execute orders in February that in ordinary times come to us in March and April. So, whether you buy from us or any other seed house, send in your orders early.

"Better Gardens"

The home garden, whether in the city, or the town, or on the farm, is today of the most vital importance to the country. For years Peter Henderson & Co. have urged the planting of more gardens because of the obvious economy, but there is a new appeal that cannot be disregarded. The home garden is an increasing factor in food conservation, and from month to month the need becomes more pressing and urgent, not only of "more gardens," but also of "better gardens."

Make your home garden a better garden this year by the most intelligent use of the space you have—not only by using the better methods but by planting seeds of known quality. The initial cost of the seeds that you plant is one of the smallest items, but it is the most important, and you cannot get the fullest results unless you have started right.

Henderson's seeds are tested seeds. Many of the methods of seed testing in use today originated with the founder of our firm, and these have been improved from year to year. Our seventy-two years of success in our business of seed raising, testing and selling has given an unequalled experience that is back of every packet or package of seed we sell.

"Everything for the Garden" is the title of our 1919 catalogue. It is really a book of 184 pages, with 8 colored pages, and over 1,000 halftones, all from actual photographs showing actual results without exaggeration. It is a library of everything worth while, either in farm, garden or home.

A Remarkable Offer of Henderson's Seed Specialties

To demonstrate the superiority of Henderson's Tested Seeds we have made up a Henderson Collection, consisting of one packet each of the following six great specialties:

Ponderosa Tomato
Big Boston Lettuce
White Tipped Scarlet Radish
Henderson's Invincible Asters
Henderson's Brilliant Mixture Poppies
Spencer Mammoth Waved Sweet Peas

To obtain the largest possible distribution for our annual catalogue "Everything for the Garden," we make the following unusual offer: Mail us 10c and we will send you the catalogue, together with this remarkable "Henderson Specialty Collection," and complete cultural directions.

Paderewski, Musician, Acclaimed Now as Statesman, Brings Harmony from the Rival Factions in His Native Country

State Will Be First-Class Power---Letts, Lithuanians, and Ukrainians Must Be Pacified --- Boycott of the Jews an Issue © Press Illustrating Service.

DANTZIC, WHICH POLES CLAIM AS THEIR SEAPORT.
Showing the Famous Neptune Fountain and the Junkerhof, Used as an Exchange Since 1742.

PADEREWSKI the musician is in eclipse. Paderewski the statesman is in the world spotlight.

The prodigy who at the age of three began playing the piano, the composer of opera and sonata, glows but faintly in the penumbra of Poland's coalition Premier and Foreign Minister.

It is easy in such circumstances to speak of a political concerto and to make plays on such words as "harmony"; but in Poland even the punsters seem to regard Paderewski, who is appealing to them to be Poles first and party men afterward, solely as a patriot. "The fact that he is an artist," said an Associated Press dispatch not long since, "passed unnoticed. It occurred to nobody to oppose him on that ground with the argument that he was therefore unfitted for a statesman's job."

The qualifications of Ignace Jan Paderewski for his political task are best established by the results. Perhaps no statesman ever trod a thornier path than he who sought to reconcile the bitterly warring factions within the New Poland. Not only were the Poles themselves divided, but Lithuanians, Letts, Ukrainians, Germans, Czechs, and Jews must be pacified. That Paderewski apparently achieved success is a personal triumph. It was not entirely a triumph of the National Polish Committee, with which he had been identified, for some of the factions have grievances against that organization. It was due in a measure to Paderewski's freedom from association with any of the old political parties in Poland, and in part to his devotion to the cause of a liberated nation.

It was the example of this devotion that enabled Paderewski to weld together all the dissident political factions save one, the Radical Socialists. To those followers of Karl Marx, known in Russia as Bolsheviki, he made no concessions. They are not represented in the new Cabinet he formed, although all the other parties, press dispatches say, are so represented, with business and professional men in posts where their special equipment is likely to prove of value to the nation in the troublous times ahead. The Minister of Finance, for instance, is M. Englich, a banker of Posen.

The times will not be less troublous, because the Radical Socialists are without representation in the Cabinet, and are disgruntled thereat. Already they are calling Paderewski a "pretender," and are asserting that he "kidnapped" the Government set up temporarily under the dictatorship of General Pilsudski. Apparently, some apprehension is felt lest he seek the Presidency of the republic. His own views on that matter were expressed in a letter he wrote to associates in New York, soon after the ovations to him in Poland had set going rumors that he would be elected.

"After this is over," he said, "I want nothing but a farm and a piano."

That the Poles of America are earnest in their support of the new Government was indicated by a meeting 8,000 of them attended last Sunday in New York City, at which a resolution was adopted demanding allied recognition, as follows:

> We also ask for the immediate recognition of the Government of Poland as constituted by Mr. Paderewski, (a coalition Government formed by him after an agreement with General Pilsudski.)
> We ask that the new Government be granted a loan, negotiated with strict observance of financial as well as national responsibilities, for Poland does not seek charity. For the Polish soldiers in the field, who are seeking to restore order and to protect the population from lawless bands of returning German and Russian prisoners of war and the terror of the Reds, we ask for aid in clothing, in munitions, and materials of war.
> We are in harmony with the vision of Mr. Paderewski. He speaks our thoughts. We express our admiration for the patriotic efforts of the Polish National Committee of Paris, and we send to the delegates who are to represent the Polish Nation at the Peace Conference our sincere support and confidence.

Before going to Europe, Paderewski, as plenipotentiary to America of the National Polish Committee, which had won the official recognition of the Allies, had amazed Americans, who knew him only as a great musician, by his statesmanlike qualities. He is said to have spent most of his personal fortune in the work of arousing this country to Poland's plight. From end to end of the United States he gave "benefit" concerts and delivered addresses. The speeches were extemporaneous, and Paderewski was so saturated with the history of his nation and with the political and economic factors involved that he seemed not even to require notes.

Paderewski's influence is credited with stimulating the enlistment of Poles in America for service abroad, both in the United States Army, when they were acceptable, and for General Franz Haller's force in France. It is estimated that 220,000 served with the American forces and 30,000 under General Haller; and after the armistice was signed, recruiting for the latter service continued, and is continuing now. Let those who suppose the war to be over consider the fact that at 180 Second Avenue an average of fifty men daily is being recruited to fight for Poland. In the first six weeks after the armistice was signed the number ran to 3,500, and since then boats have left American shores weekly bearing fresh squadrons. For Poland still is at war, not only with the Bolsheviki, but with some of her neighbors. Loyal Poles in the United States seem eager to defend her.

Most serious, from the military aspect, is the war against the Bolshevist forces. But the new Polish State, as tentatively planned by Paderewski and his associates, would include about 5,000,000 Ukrainians, about 3,000,000 White Ruthenians, as many Lithuanians, 2,000,000 Germans, and 500,000 Letts, according to the claims of representatives in America of those races; and this gave rise to pitched battles within her boundaries. The contention of Paderewski and his supporters is that, to be strong enough to resist Bolshevist encroachment from the east and German economic domination on the west, Poland must have coal, iron, and other raw materials in abundance to support the national life. The contention of the Ukrainians (Ruthenians) and of the Lithuanians is that they should form small separate States. Those are questions which must be decided at the peace table, but, pending their decision, blood has been spilled over them.

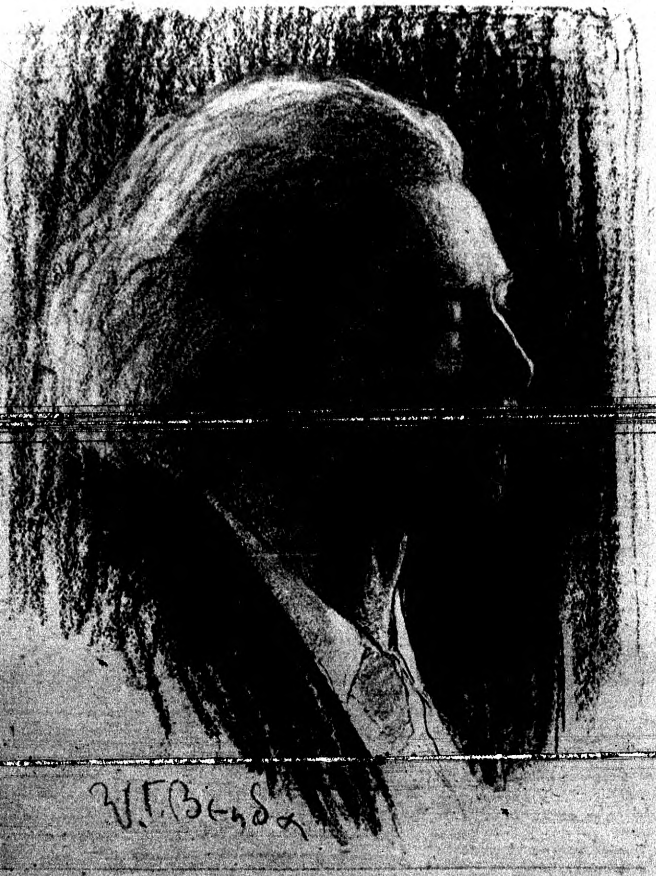
News dispatches from Paris during the last week indicate that the Peace Conference delegates support Paderewski's view of the importance of making the new republic "integrally complete, economically independent, and capable of becoming a first-class power." These dispatches indicate, too, an intention to give Poland the City of Danzig, (Gdansk,) although there have been suggestions that the port be internationalized. Mr. Wilson, in the thirteenth of his "fourteen points," asserted that the independent State ought to "be assured a free and secure access to the sea."

Lithuania claims the former Russian provinces of Vilna, Kovno, Suwalki, Grodno, the western part of Minsk, the southwestern section of Courland, and the northern part of East Prussia. Parts of this territory are historically Poland's; [illegible] the successive partitions of that State by Germany, Austria, and Russia. It has been suggested by Paderewski that separate Lithuanian and Ukrainian republics be created, and associated with Poland in some kind of customs union. These facts are set down merely to indicate the tangle in which the Polish situation was involved when Paderewski arrived there early this year.

There was another tangle over a boycott against the Jews. Louis Marshall, who has devoted special attention here to this question, and has talked at length about it with Paderewski and Roman Dmowski, Chairman of the National Committee, estimates that there would be 4,000,000 Jews within the boundaries of the Poland they hope to see created, and says that Dmowski's attitude toward that race has been the cause of opposition in this country toward the committee.

At a series of luncheons and dinners in New York, the two Polish leaders, singly or together, thrashed out the question with Oscar Straus, Julius Rosenwald, Mr. Marshall, Rabbi Wise, and other Jewish leaders. The National Polish Committee, from its headquarters in Paris, had issued a statement promising equal political rights to minority nationalities, and concluding with the sentence: "No privileged classes shall exist in new Poland: Polish citizens without distinction as to origin, race, or creed must all stand equal before the law." Paderewski sent the statement to Mr. Marshall, who raised this objection:

> Inasmuch as the Jews of Poland are probably the only people within the boundaries of that New Poland which it is your ambition to create who have suffered from discrimination at the hands of the Poles, a mere general declaration such as that quoted will not suffice. Such a declaration was contained in the Treaty of Berlin, by which the Kingdom of Rumania was created, and yet Rumania for forty years has disregarded the mandate of the treaty and has defined Rumanian citizenship in such terms as to exclude the Jews from the rights which it was intended to accord to them, especially the right of equality before the law, which has been studiously withheld from them.



From a Drawing by W. T. Benda.

Ignace Jan Paderewski, Polish Premier and Foreign Minister.

Polish Battle Standard.

Before Poland Became a Republic the Wings of the Eagle Were Folded.

Mr. Marshall said the other day that he had no criticism to make of Paderewski; but he told of a conversation between him and Dmowski, in which the Chairman of the committee admitted that he had fomented the boycott against the Polish Jews. This conversation took place last October at the Hotel Plaza, and Mr. Marshall wrote a report of it while it was fresh in his memory. He had the report printed in pamphlet form. Mr. Marshall quotes the Polish leader as saying:

> I must confess that personally I have been hostile to the Jews and have as a leader of a political party deliberately engaged in a struggle against them, and am responsible for the economic boycott to which they have been subjected. I know your feelings on the subject, but I will give you the reasons which prompted my action. About 1908 a large number of Lithuanian Jews, who could no longer endure the treatment accorded to them by Russia, came to Poland. Strangely enough they persisted, after they came to Poland, in speaking the Russian language obtrusively. They also began a movement whereby the Jews were induced to employ Jewish doctors and Jewish lawyers instead of Polish physicians and lawyers as theretofore. Consequently, they began what I call a boycott.
> Although the Jews of Warsaw represented only 38 per cent. of the population, they took upon themselves to advocate the election of a Jew to the Duma instead of a Pole, there being but one representative in the Duma from Warsaw. This culminated at the election for the Fourth Duma in 1912 in a serious conflict. On account of the peculiarity of the election laws and the attitude of the Polish electorate, many of whom intentionally abstained from registering, it was found that the Jews who had availed themselves of the right of registration represented 24,000 voters and the Poles only 22,000, and as a result of this situation the candidate of our party was defeated. The Jews brought about the election of the Socialist candidate. This led to great bitterness, and from that time on we conducted the boycott of which you are complaining.
> There were other reasons which led to a clash between the Poles and the Jews. Poland is a poor country. Until recently the Poles were engaged in agriculture and as laborers exclusively. The Jews devoted themselves to commerce and industry. It became apparent to the Poles that it was desirable that they should also engage in commerce to enable them to gain a livelihood. That resulted in competition with the Jews, who resented the intrusion of the Poles into their economic field.
> Unfortunately it was a struggle for existence between two portions of the population, both of which were exceedingly poor. There were not crumbs enough to go around. It was, therefore, a question as to who should have the crumbs. Although the Poles are poor, the Jews are even more wretched. They have been exploited, their workshops are of necessity in their homes, are most unsanitary, and even with the assistance of their children they have found it difficult to earn enough to keep them from starvation. On the other hand, the Russians who exploited them were growing rich on the proceeds of the labor of these wretched people.
> Another reason for the growing hostility of the Poles against the Jews lay in the fact that the Jews persisted in speaking Yiddish, and even their men of education, who had in and before 1862 been patriotic Poles, began to take the attitude that the Polish cause was a lost cause, that Poland was finished, and they, therefore, directed their activities into other channels. In Posen the Jews rapidly absorbed the German language and abandoned even Yiddish, and even in towns in which they were in the majority they changed Polish names, which had previously been used, into German [illegible] contributed to the creation of a feeling of animosity, and it was for that reason that I and my party encouraged the boycott, which has been a very severe one and terrible in its operation, and I am frank to say that it continues to this moment and has been growing worse instead of better.

Polish Recruiting at 180 Second Avenue, Where 50 Men Weekly Are Joining the Forces to Defend the New Republic.

Mr. Marshall declared he thought the boycott monstrous, and he reports that Dmowski said that word was not out of place. "In fact," Mr. Marshall quotes him as saying, "I like that word." Mr. Marshall said Dmowski's explanation of the boycott was substantially the same as that given by Paderewski in a conversation with him and Mr. Rosenwald, but denied that it could constitute a justification.

"The language question," he said, "certainly could not have justified a boycott. You know how tenacious people are of their mother tongue, and it is only a chauvinist who seeks to prevent people from speaking in the language familiar to them from childhood. I remember the indignation felt by the Poles, as well as by all reasonable and fair-minded men, when Germany sought by legislation to forbid the Poles who lived in Germany to speak, read, or write Polish."

There was some discussion of the reports of pogroms in Poland, which Dmowski and Paderewski both declare emphatically to be false. The news from Poland comes through Germany, and much of it has been unreliable, such as the report that Paderewski had been wounded by an assassin, and the fantastic story that 30,000 Poles were marching on Berlin, at a time when Poland was appealing for military aid against the Bolsheviki on her other flank. In regard to pogroms, Mr. Marshall said:

> Let me say that, in my judgment, a pogrom is a thousand times less objectionable than the boycott which you have invented. A pogrom is an act of brutality, it is sporadic, it is an outburst of passion, which dies down almost as rapidly as it comes into being; there is bloodshed and loss of property. But such a boycott

Making Money Do Double Duty

A Success Story; How I Systematized Home Expenses and Put Myself in Business

By W. HERBERT SINCLAIR

"NOW, WALTER," said my wife the other night as we were in the living room [illegible] clearing the table, "I believe that you ought to find some way to tell the other men about it."

"About what?" I asked as I lighted my after-dinner cigar.

"Your experience. What else did you imagine?"

"My experience!" I exclaimed almost in surprise. "Why, nobody would be interested; nobody cares what I did."

"You're both right and wrong," was my good wife's answer. "Nobody cares about what you did, but there are thousands of men and their wives who are vitally interested in HOW you did it.

"I'm sure that every one these days is more than merely interested in learning how to do more than make both ends meet. People would like to know how to be able to visit the bank regularly and deposit some money that they know will not have to be drawn out and used the next week or the next month.

"You've had a wonderful experience—actually had it. You were so steeped in despair that you saw nothing but black ahead of you. Many men today are in that same position; others do not see dull black, but the outlook for them is mighty gray, while a still larger number are heading toward your former unenviable position and do not know how to stop themselves.

"You owe a debt to these men, to their wives and to their children. It is your humanitarian duty to show them how they can have and enjoy more of the good things of life."

"But I'm no writer, Belle," was my protest.

"You don't have to tell me that; I know it. And you don't have to write your story. Just tell it—tell it as you would to Frank Tallman or Harry Franklin or any other good friend of yours whom you wanted to help. You're a business man and not a writer. That will make your experience, as you must tell it, all the more interesting and helpful."

* * * *

Here is my story—just the facts with no frills of the professional writer and without any attempt at what the critics call style.

Four years ago I was the owner of my own business. It was paying well and growing. The outlook was so rosy that neither my wife nor myself saw any reason for stinting ourselves. We lived right up to my income, as most people do, and always said to one another that we would begin saving when we had finished doing this or that. We had everything we wanted and did not know the meaning of financial worries.

I worked hard. The business required all of my attention. Long hours and a heavy mental strain were my portion six days in a week. My health was slipping, but I didn't dare admit it. I fought nature. Then the inevitable happened. I broke down. I was forced to give up business.

Now it happened that my business was of such a nature that it required my personal attention. This I was unable to give it. I was forced to sell out. I couldn't work. My wife and I decided to live on the money I received until I recovered my health.

At first we did not change our mode of living. It was not long, however, before we saw that such a move would be absolutely necessary. We took a cheaper apartment. We dispensed with a maid, while my wife did her own housework. But even with these economies our money just seemed to slide away. We didn't know where it went. Right there, I found out later, was where our trouble lay.

These were hard times, particularly for my wife and child. I didn't mind it so much myself, but I hated to see my wife look worse than I ever had seen her look. And it pained me to observe that my little girl was not so well dressed nor so healthy appearing as other children. Those things began to tell on me. They retarded my recovery. Lack of sufficient money to tide us over an emergency was the cause of it all. And it was our inability to save when we had money that made it seem impossible to save when we needed to do so.

One day, when I was deepest in despair, a good friend asked me to lunch with him. I did. He was a diplomat. Although he knew of my plight he talked on subjects which he knew would not cause me pain. After luncheon he invited me to come to his home that night to discuss a business proposition.

"I'm in no condition to talk business," I said in reply to his invitation.

"Oh, yes, you are," he answered laughingly. "This kind of business. You'll enjoy it. And what is more, [illegible] to you."

I was puzzled. What did he mean? I told Belle where I was going after dinner.

Benedict—that was my friend's name—invited me into his study. After handing out better cigars than I had smoked for a long time (I had given up cigars, although I was inordinately fond of them) he started in.

"Walter," he said, "I consider myself one of your best friends. In that position I can dispense with a lot of ceremony and a certain amount of so-called diplomacy.

"I've been watching you for some time. I know what's wrong. I know that you were doing well in business. I also know that you didn't save any of the money you made and that all the money you had when your health failed was what you received for your business.

"The money couldn't go far even after you pared expenses. You're right smack up against it.

"The truth of the matter, however, is that you had enough money to go on living as you were IF you had known how to spend it. And right now you have enough left to keep you and your family properly until you have recovered completely.

"I asked you to come here tonight because I want you to learn how to stretch money!"

With that Benedict excused himself. He returned in a moment with a little black book. Drawing his chair beside mine he touched the book and said most seriously:

"Here's the greatest little money stretcher in the world. It helps you to make a dollar go farther than anything I know. It's just a book. But, oh, such a book! Now let us look into it."

Benedict talked to me for fully two hours. He told me how, three years before, he had purchased this book and brought it home. He explained that the first year, through its use, he had been able to save $800 out of his $3,000 salary and live better than ever before. The second year he received a raise in salary and managed to save $1,100. With this $1,900, which he never would have had, he said, if it had not been for that book, he started in business. Even now, with seemingly nothing to worry about, he and his wife kept up the book. They found that it let them have things that otherwise they would have to do without.

"Why, Walter," Benedict said, "I wouldn't give up using this book now for $500 a year more income because it saves me more than that."

Benedict's talk and the evidence of his prosperity set me thinking. The next morning I bought a book like Benedict showed me. That night, after Belle had cleared the table, I called a family council.

"Belle, you realize as well as I that something must be done about our finances," I began. "You've done all you can. I've been remiss. But it's never too late to mend. Last night, at Benedict's house, my eyes were opened. Now I'm going to open yours. You've been a good, dutiful, careful wife. But it is plain that there is something radically wrong somewhere. Now we're going to correct it."

"Everything is so high, Walter, that I simply don't know what to do," interrupted Belle. And she was on the verge of tears.

"There, there, Belle," I said as I tried to comfort her. "I told you that it was all my fault, not yours. I'm to blame because I didn't put system in the home just as I did in my office—when I had one—and as I will do when I have another."

Then I produced the book.

"Now, here's a book that will put business system into the home."

"What kind of a book is it?" inquired Belle.

"It's called the Woolson Economy Expense Book," I told her.

Then I showed Belle what it was intended to do and why it did it. I showed her how easy it was to keep this book. All that was necessary was to enter the items that she bought and their cost each day. Columns were provided for monies received and disbursed. So that disbursements could be separated properly there were columns for Rent and Water, for Light and Heat, for Meats and Groceries, Labor and Services, Insurance and Taxes, Interest, Furniture, Clothing, Physician and Medicine, Carfare, Books and Magazines, Amusements, and for every other possible expense of a family.

It would take only three or four minutes a day to keep up the Woolson Economy Expense Book. It would show where every cent of our money went. It would help us reduce expenses where they were too heavy and eliminate needless purchases. Then, too, keeping such a book really would be great fun.

Next I explained to Belle how to "budget" our expenses.

"That's just what I have been doing," Belle answered.

"I know. But the trouble has been that you never could tell when you exceeded your budget. You unknowingly used the money for one thing to buy another and then had to go without something that you really needed. With this book you save unconsciously. It makes saving a pleasure. There's nothing complicated about it."

Well, Belle entered into the spirit of it. We appropriated budgets for everything. Belle and Babe kept the book. At the end of the first week Belle showed me where she had spent $8 less than we had figured necessary. And we hadn't wanted for anything. The next week we did even better—saved $10.85. Each week the saving kept up. Belle and Babe bought clothes, for we were learning how to stretch money!

Everything was changed. I had no financial worries. My health improved rapidly. Soon I was able to take up a position at a good salary. We kept right on saving. Woolson's Economy Expense Book made it so easy that we actually didn't know that we were saving except when we looked at our bank book and saw the balance growing steadily larger.

That was a little more than three years ago.

Last week I again started in business for myself. The money which we had saved through the help of the book enabled me to do it. The other day I met Bill Benedict and asked him if he was still keeping up his Woolson Economy Expense Book.

"You bet I am," he said, grinning from ear to ear.

And I said to him: "Bill, I'll never be able to thank you enough for bringing that book and what it does to my attention."

* * * *

There's my story. Nothing fancy about it, is there? But it's a true story that never would have happened had I gone on trying to save, without system, as so many other men are trying to do. I have told my story just as Belle said I should. But there's something else I want to say on my own hook now that I am about it.

I feel that every family should get and keep a Woolson Economy Expense Book no matter how big or how small their income is. It has done so much for me and for my family that I often go out of my way to tell others about it.

Anybody can keep this book accurately. There's nothing complicated about it. No knowledge of bookkeeping is necessary. It takes but a few minutes a day.

What this book has done for me it should and can do for every other man. The man who goes along trying to save without system, which this book provides, will never save as much money, even though he earns $500 a year more, than the man who lets this great little book help him.

Another thing about this book is that it helps him keep his income and expenses in such a way that he can make out his Income Tax Return properly and avoid a possible clash with the law. An accurate Income Tax Return is more necessary now than ever with the new, higher tax proposed in Congress.

Woolson's Economy Expense Book is not an untried idea. The first Woolson's Economy Expense Book was sold over fifteen years ago—it was the first household account book and none of the many adaptations to it which have since appeared on the market have succeeded in developing a more simple system.

The publishers of Woolson's Economy Expense Book, in view of the present cost of necessities, desire to distribute several hundred thousand copies of the new, greatly enlarged edition. They are doing it in this way:

Merely write to them asking that a copy be sent you without cost for a five days' examination. At the end of that time, if you wish to return the book, you may do so without further obligation; or if you wish to keep the book, the price is ridiculously low considering the amount of money it will save for you. The cost is but $2. SEND NO MONEY unless you prefer to. It will be returned upon request. Fill in the coupon, mail it, and the book will be sent to you immediately.

American Girls as Members of Opera Ballet

They Are Far Superior to Europeans, Says Russian Dancing Expert

Serge Oukrainsky as the "God Dragon" in the Ballet of the Opera "Samson and Delilah."

AMERICAN girls compose the Pavley and Oukrainsky ballet with the Chicago Grand Opera, which will open a five-week season at the Lexington Theatre tomorrow. Even Mlle. Anna Ludmilla, who is one of the six premier danseurs, is of American birth, and so are the two score in the regular ballet. Many of them received their training in the Pavley and Oukrainsky studios.

"Contrary to the generally accepted belief," says Mr. Pavley, "European girls do not make the best ballet girls. I have found by practical experience that American girls are far superior.

"In the first place they are more intelligent. They learn more quickly. They are better nourished, and that means they are in better physical condition. Physique means a tremendous lot in ballet work. Then, too, American girls are as a rule prettier.

"The reason that foreigners have held the first place in ballets and as premier danseurs in past years is that they have received the proper training. That is the only drawback with Americans in a great many cases. They want to accomplish everything in one minute."

The accompanying photographs show Serge Oukrainsky and Mlle. Ludmilla in ballet poses during the performance of "Samson and Delilah."

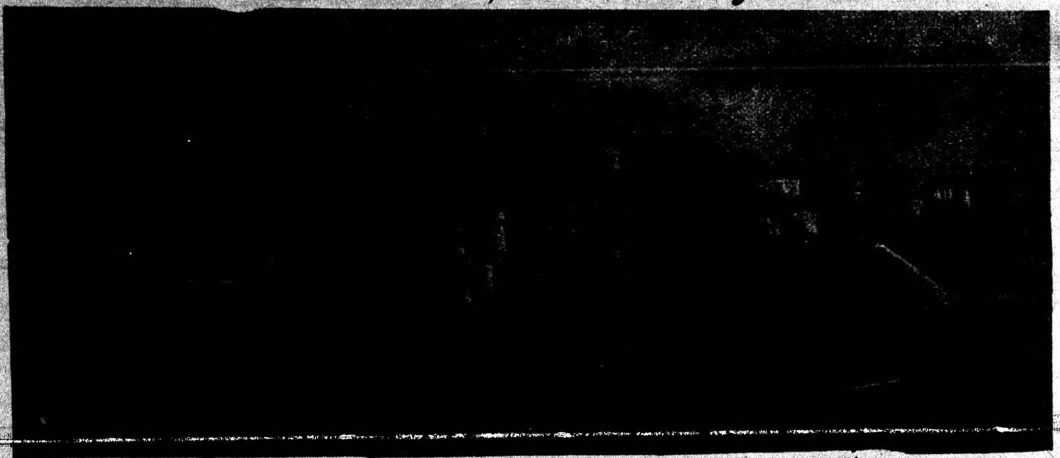
Princes' Islands, Suddenly Famous



Hotels on Prinkipo, Princes' Islands.

THE Princes' Islands, brought suddenly into prominence by being suggested as the meeting place of representatives of the various Russian factions and the allied Governments, got their name because they served as a place of exile hundreds of years ago for Princes of the Byzantine Empire. The Emperors of Byzantium used to punish disobedient dignitaries by confining them on these islands—not such a hard fate after all, since they are only ten miles from Constantinople, set in the lovely blue Sea of Marmora. [illegible]

Now there are no more Princely exiles on the islands, but thousands of tourists still visit them annually.

There are in all eight islands in the group, of which only four are inhabited. The others are mere rocky islets, frequented by fishermen, and made unpleasant by enormous numbers of dogs relegated there by the Young Turkish Government in an endeavor to rid Constantinople of its superfluous canine population.

The largest and most beautiful island of the group is Prinkipo, upon which the Russians and the representatives of the Allies will undoubtedly meet if the projected conference is ever held. Prinkipo is twelve miles from Constantinople, and is the most thickly populated of all. With its five hills covered with dense groups of sweet-smelling pines and girt by the limpid blue of the Sea of Marmora, Prinkipo seems a bit of fairyland to the visitor approaching in the steamboat from Constantinople. On the top of each hill is a church or monastery.

The principal pastime among the Summer visitors to Prinkipo is donkey riding. One may often see hundreds of tourists, in one big cavalcade, circling the pretty island. Carriage riding is also a favorite pastime.

Taking one of the little steamboats plying between Prinkipo and Constantinople one comes, after a five minutes' sail, to Halki, the next island in size to Prinkipo. Halki, like its larger sister, has numerous cafés by the water side, where bands play for the delectation of Summer residents. It also has a naval academy and a theological college of the Greek Orthodox Church, with hundreds of students wearing long hair and picturesque uniforms. From this college many patriarchs of the Greek Church have been graduated.

Ten minutes by steamboat [illegible] is Antigoni, third in size of the group, an islet of picturesque pine-clad hills, with an ancient monastery. On Antigoni many retired patriarchs of the Greek Orthodox Church make their homes.

Between Antigoni and Constantinople and ten minutes' sail from the former is the Island of Proti, the only other inhabited island of the Princes' group and the highest of all.

Blossom Time in January New York, 1919

Somehow the Weather Man Got His Dates Mixed This Winter, and the Trees Began to Bud Two Months Ahead of Their Schedule

TREES budded in the city's parks last week, and the dandelions showed themselves on the lawns of the Cathedral of St. John. It was January, but down at the Weather Bureau was recorded a story of Springtime. For two weeks, said the statistician last Wednesday, the average temperature had been 39 degrees. The normal temperature for March is 38 degrees. So at the end of January we were just on the verge of entering into April. It may be remembered that on Jan. 1 the temperature was 50 degrees. That is four degrees above the normal temperature for a day in the middle of April.

The prolonged Springlike period came along on Jan. 14. Up to that time the weather, though at intervals far from severe, was not abnormal in warmth. The normal temperature for the month of January, as computed over the range of years that the Weather Bureau has been in existence, is 30 degrees.

Taken altogether, the warm Winter has been remarkable, though not unprecedented. According to the records at the Weather Bureau, January, 1906, had an average temperature of 37.3 degrees; January, 1880, a temperature of 39.8 degrees; January, 1913, 40 degrees, and January, 1890, a record of 40.2 degrees.

It Feels Like April to the Squirrel and His Friend.

As to snowfall, this year has ranked lowest in the reports of the bureau. Last year was, of course, unusual. The figures for the months of December and January of 1917-1918 showed a depth exceeding twenty-five inches. In January alone there were 13.6 inches of snow. This year the figures for January are .3 inch, with .4 inch for December, or a total of .7 for the two months. The year 1914 holds the record for the smallest amount of snowfall heretofore, with a depth of 1.5 inches; 1915 came next with 6.4 inches, and 1916 with 8.8 inches.

Forecasts that the warm weather would continue were issued as January neared its end. The prevailing winds had a strong southerly component in them, to a degree far above the normal. During the severe Winter of last year there were no southerly winds recorded in the entire month of January. The year before had only one record of a southerly wind. During 1916, which was also an unusually warm Winter, the prevailing winds were southwest. At that time the average temperature for January was 35.4 degrees, or 5.4 above normal.

The interior of the country also has had a warm wave. The temperature in the Mississippi Valley since Jan. 1 has been really phenomenal, and the farmers there are in a quandary about their Spring planting. Hereabout the farmers have reported that there has not been a frost for weeks and that some of them are already preparing for actual work.

American Ways Taken Back Home by Immigrants from Balkans

ARNOLD J. TOYNBEE, English historian and one of the investigators of Turkish atrocities in Armenia, writing the history of Greece in a new history of the Balkans, published by the Oxford Press, holds out the possibility that the mixed and warring races of Southeast Europe may be brought to a more peaceable consideration of each other through their common experience as emigrants to America. This common experience, he says, may have an important part in keeping the peace in that part of the world, where the spark was struck which set the world conflagration. How this influence works, Mr. Toynbee shows as follows:

"Since the opening of the present century, the chaotic, unneighborly races of Southeastern Europe, whom nothing had united before but the common impress of the Turk, have begun to share another experience in common—America. From the Slovak villages in the Carpathians to the Greek villages in the Laconian hills, they have been crossing the Atlantic in their thousands, to become dockers and navvies, bootblacks and waiters, confectioners and barbers in Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha and all the other cities that have sprung up like magic to welcome the immigrant to the hospitable plains of the Middle West.

"The intoxication of his new environment stimulates all the latent industry and vitality of the Balkan peasant, and he abandons himself wholeheartedly to American life; yet he does not relinquish the national tradition in which he grew up. In America work brings wealth, and the Greek or Slovak soon worships his God in a finer church and reads his language in a better printed newspaper than he ever enjoyed in his native village. The surplus flows home in remittances of such abundance that they are steadily raising the cost of living in the Balkans themselves, or, in other words, the standard of material civilization.

"It is a strange experience to spend a night in some remote mountain village of Greece, and see Americanism and Hellenism face to face. Hellenism is represented by the village schoolmaster. He wears a black coat, talks a little French, and can probably read Homer; but his longest journey has been to the normal school at Athens, and it has not altered his belief that the ikon in the neighboring monastery was made by St. Luke and the Bulgar beyond the mountain by the devil.

"On the other side of you sits the returned emigrant, chattering irrepressibly in his queer version of the 'American language,' and showing you the newspapers which are mailed to him every fortnight from the States. His clean linen collar and his well-made American boots are conspicuous upon him, and he will deprecate on your behalf and his own the discomfort and squalor of his native surroundings. His homecoming has been a disillusionment, but it is a creative phenomenon; and if any one can set Greece on a new path it is he. He is transforming her material life by his American savings, for they are accumulating into a capital widely distributed in native hands, which will dispense the nation from pawning its richest mines and vineyards to the European exploiter, and enable it to carry on their development on their own account at this critical juncture when European sources of capital are cut off for an indefinite period by the disaster of the European war.

"The emigrant will give Greece all Trikoupis dreamed of, but his greatest gift to this country will be his American point of view. In the West he has learned that men of every language and religion can live in the same city and work in the shops and sheds and mills and switchyards without desecrating each other's churches or even suppressing each other's newspapers, not to speak of cutting each other's throats; and when next he meets Albanian or Bulgar on Balkan ground, he may remember that he has once dwelt with him in fraternity at Omaha, or St. Louis or Chicago. * * *

"Will this new leaven conquer, and cast out the stale leaven of Hellenism before it sours the loaf? Common sense is mighty, but whether it shall prevail in Greece and the Balkans and Europe lies on the knees of the gods."

ROOSEVELT'S SUCCESSOR

Who Will Be Republican Leader and Candidate for Presidency in 1920?---Outlook Two Years in Advance

© Harris & Ewing.
Ex-President William H. Taft.

SOMEWHERE in the Republican Party, either among that small group of men in its front rank or among those who thus far have achieved only a State prominence, is the man who is to take Theodore Roosevelt's place as leader of the party. Whoever he is, a great rôle awaits him; for his full credentials will be won only by obtaining the Republican nomination for President of the United States.

Who, among the present aspirants, is this leader likely to be?

Where is the best field for him to win the necessary preparatory prestige and authority?

Why, so long before the nominating convention, has the question of leadership forced itself forward as an active issue?

In the first place, the contest is already on. Every one of the small group of leaders whose names are most often mentioned would prefer to wait. They know of old that the public is likely to weary of a premature candidacy. But this time there is no waiting. The momentum of events, larger than any man's interests or desires, intervenes. Usually after a mid-term Congressional election politics settles down for a while. But now, owing to the conflict between the two parties that sprang out of the President's pre-election letter to the country, and owing to the tremendous issues growing out of the end of the war, peace terms and reconstruction problems, politics in its broader sense has been stirred to such a depth that it is beyond the power of the leaders of the two sides, even if they desired, to delay decisions of party policy and direction.

From the time of the November election issues between the two parties began to sharpen more rapidly. Two recognized leaders were in command; on the one side Wilson, on the other Roosevelt. Then came, unexpectedly, Roosevelt's death, and since then one fact has continued to impress itself more deeply on the Republican Party: "What the party needs most is a leader. But there is none with the authority—no man who reaches compellingly over both wings of the party—to take Roosevelt's place. Out of the group of aspirants some one, forging clearly to the front, must show his ability to lead. At this momentous period it is no time for opportunists or for favorite sons. What is wanted—everybody admits it—is a downright, affirmative man, with a clear grasp of the problems facing the country—one who, as Roosevelt, is able to give blow for blow.

Therefore the challenge to compete for the place of leadership is immediate. What will be the main field of the contest? Unquestionably Congress and chiefly the Senate. When the United States entered the war, the prediction was made, based on past experience, that our next President would be some General whose deeds in the fighting on the other side had thrilled the popular imagination. The civil war made Grant President, the Spanish-American War elevated Roosevelt. But this war, owing to the suppression by the censorship policy of individual achievement, apparently has left us without a war hero [illegible] Among the American Generals who fought in France. The main reason why Congress is to be the greatest theatre of opportunity for aspirants for Roosevelt's place as the leader of the Republican Party is that here the after-the-war problems must be taken up and legislation framed for their solution. In the Senate the debates on the confirmation of the peace terms will soon attract national attention. Both houses of the next Congress will be Republican, and to that party belongs the opportunity for a program of constructive legislation.

Republican politicians express confidence that the party's nominee for President will be elected; they say they have analyzed the returns and found that, taking it by Congressional districts, the Republican Party carried the last election by a majority of 1,100,000, that they carried twenty-nine States out of forty-eight, and figure that these winning States had an electoral vote of 432 against 189; but Republican leaders who look more shrewdly into the future realize that the success of the party at the polls next time depends in a large degree on the accomplishments of the Republicans in the next Congress.

Among the problems facing that Congress, besides the question of the peace terms, are the railroads, the tariff, labor legislation, the future military policy of the country, immigration legislation, price regulation, and reconstruction in general.

Most of the names heard today in connection with the Republican leadership are those of members of the Senate, though in the past not many Senators have been nominated for the Presidency. The list is culled from inquiry in several directions at Washington. The writer has talked to many Republicans and Democrats. The men mentioned oftenest are Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio, Senator Philander C. Knox of Pennsylvania, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, Senator Hiram Johnson of California, ex-President William H. Taft, Major Gen. Leonard Wood, and Governor Frank O. Louden of Illinois.

Senator Philander C. Knox.

Of the Senate list Mr. Harding comes nearer to commanding the support of both ends of the party than any of the others. As Chairman of the Republican National Convention in 1916 he delivered the keynote speech, and the impression he made throughout the proceedings was a positive one. He is of distinguished appearance, and a charm of personality is one of his assets. But so far as distinct leadership is concerned he has yet to win it; he appears to be a man who advances steadily to a purpose without haste and with reserve force for the greater occasion. It has been made apparent that he is to take a more prominent part in the Senate. In a recent speech he sharply criticised the President for not having devoted himself immediately on his arrival in Europe to bringing about a speedy peace, and also for not having given more attention to pressing reconstruction problems in this country. Practical things here at home, the Senator said, were being neglected while the dreams of idealism were being chased abroad. He said, among other things:

"America needs a policy. America must understand that, above everything else, orderly government is the first essential. I do not forget that the Executive and the Legislative during the war have preached the doctrine of revolution in the Central Empires. The doctrine was preached that [illegible] revolution to bring about tranquillity in the world. You started a fire that it is difficult to put out now.

"If we must have anarchy on the one hand or autocracy on the other, I choose autocracy. We can best stay the march of Bolshevism by appealing to the deliberate American understanding. The man who expects to stop it by the application of charity is chasing a rainbow that has no end."

Harding has been compared to McKinley as a harmonizer in his own party. In the Senate his course has been that of a "regular," though not that of a narrow party man. Undoubtedly he would have the support of his own State and it would carry the advantage of being classed as a close one. His home is at Marion, Ohio. He has been a newspaper publisher since 1884. Before he was elected to the Senate in 1914 the highest office he had held was that of Lieutenant Governor of Ohio.

Ex-President Taft's name is paired in prominence with Senator Harding's at this time. Two issues have brought him forward. One is the proposed League of Nations. The prospect that it may be worked out seems to have filled him with even more vitality and energy than he previously possessed. He will tour the country, it is reported, in behalf of the League to Enforce Peace and make League of Nations speeches. If the Paris Peace Conference adopts a League of Nations plan, with the consequence that questions of our country's relation will become of the most pressing concern, Mr. Taft's importance as a Presidential possibility will no doubt be much enhanced. The other issue with which he has been identified appeals to a large element of the country. As Chairman of the War Labor Board he has shown much consideration for the claims of labor and has stood firmly by what he deemed labor was justly entitled to. This, evidently, is his way of escaping the discontent that forms a seed bed for Bolshevist ideas. His course has certainly been the opposite to that of a lack of sympathy with labor, as charged against him in some political campaigns in the past.

"One reason Taft has come back," said a Democratic Senator who follows politics closely, "is his wholesomeness. He showed himself a good loser, cheery in [illegible] defeat, and the way he has supported the war is admired by all. Then, too, it was he that made the approaches which resulted in his reconciliation with Colonel Roosevelt. And the probability of a League of Nations seems to have made a new man of him—I mean new literally, with a drive he never had before. I say, Look out for Taft!"

Senator Knox is close up on the list of possibilities. Roosevelt's name is used in his favor. It is recalled that shortly before the 1916 convention Colonel Roosevelt suggested as a compromise between himself and Mr. Hughes that Senator Knox would be acceptable to him. Knox was Secretary of State in Roosevelt's Cabinet and is a student of foreign relations. In addition he has given much time to a study of business methods, and, his admirers say, has an unusual grasp of the business problems of the future. He does not speak often in the Senate, but when he does he commands attention. Not a few call him the ablest Republican member. He would be assured of the solid support of the conservative element of his party.

Recently Senator Knox has defined his course on great issues, with vigorous initiative. His first step was to declare that the League of Nations idea should be taken up separately and not until after the Allies had imposed their terms on the Central Powers. Later he urged what he characterized as "a new American doctrine."

"Can we not perceive emerging from these facts a new American doctrine?" he said. "I will state this great doctrine in these words: If a situation should arise in which any power or combination of powers should directly or indirectly menace the freedom and peace of the world, the United States would regard such a situation with grave concern as a menace to its own freedom and peace and would consult with other powers affected, with a view to concerted action to remove such menace. If this had been the avowed and understood policy of the United States before July, 1914, it is, in my judgment, very improbable that the war would have occurred. When at length the United States had perceived and had acted on this policy with mighty effect, the war had entered on its last and victorious phase."

Mr. Knox is opposed to a League of Nations to enforce peace. He said: "I should not vote for any treaty that subjected this nation's judgment and conscience as to its vital interests or its war-making prerogative to the will of a foreign majority."

The military man most spoken of as the Republican candidate for the Presidency is one who took no part in the fighting on the other side—Major Gen.

Little Signs That Help Reveal Character at a Glance

The Simple Knack of Knowing All About a Person

EVERY ONE knows that a high forehead indicates the intellectual type—that a receding chin denotes weakness, while a pronounced chin means determination—these things and a few other signs are understood by all. But often these signs are counterbalanced by others which are just as apparent but which the average person doesn't know how to diagnose.

As a consequence we often jump to conclusions about people which prove incorrect because we don't carry our observations far enough. It's like trying to read a sentence by looking at the first one or two words. We might guess the sense, but more likely than not we'd go wrong. Yet once you have the secret, you can understand what all the little signs mean and get a complete picture of the characteristics of every person you meet.

I know this to be true, for I used to be about the poorest judge of character that I know. I was always making friends only to find that they were the wrong kind, or saying the wrong thing to my customers because I had failed to "size them up" correctly, or lending money to people who never intended to pay me back. I even made a costly mistake by giving up a good job to go into partnership with a man who turned out to be little short of a thief.

I was pretty much discouraged by this time, and I determined that the thing for me to do was to learn to read character, if such a thing as that was possible, for I felt that unless I did know whom I could trust and whom I couldn't, I never would get very far.

It was about this time that I read an article about Dr. Katherine M. H. Blackford, who is recognized as one of the foremost character analysts in this country, and who was employed by a big company at a record fee to select their employees. I thought then that if hardheaded business-men paid such a salary as this in order to insure their getting the right kind of workers that there sure must be something in character reading for me.

One day while in Pittsburg my eye was attracted to an announcement of a lecture on Character Analysis by Dr. Blackford, and I decided to go and see if I could learn anything.

That lecture was an eye opener! Not only did Dr. Blackford show that it is easy to read the little signs that reveal a person's character, but after the lecture she gave a remarkable demonstration of character reading that amazed the audience.

She asked the audience to select two people in the hall to come up and be analyzed. Several men, all of them entirely unknown to Dr. Blackford, were suggested, and finally two were chosen. As they came upon the platform Dr. Blackford looked them over keenly and, after a moment's thought, began to analyze both of them at once. As she mentioned the characteristics of one she described the corresponding characteristics in the other.

Beginning with generalities, she told the audience, every one of whom seemed to know both men, that one was a good mixer, aggressive, bold and determined, while the other was more or less of a recluse, very self-contained, quiet and gentle.

The first, she said, was brilliant, clever, quick-witted and resourceful; the second a silent man, slow and deliberate when he spoke and relied upon calm, mature judgment rather than brilliant strokes of ingenuity and wit.

The first man, according to Dr. Blackford, was active, restless, always on the go, impatient, and able to express himself only in some active, aggressive manner. The second man was studious, plodding and constant, and expressed himself after prolonged concentration and careful thought. The first man, the doctor said, was therefore especially equipped to execute plans, to carry to success any course of action, but was not particularly qualified to make plans or to map out a course of action—he could make practical use of many different kinds of knowledge, but did not have the patience or the power of concentration to search out and classify the knowledge so that it could be used. While he was a brilliant speaker, a resourceful and effective debater, he lacked the power to dig out and assemble the material for orations and debates. The second man, she continued, being shy and self-conscious, could not speak in public, but was a master of study and research and strong in his ability to classify and correlate all kinds of knowledge.

"What I've learned enables me to know a great deal about a man the first time I meet him."

"Indeed," said Dr. Blackford, "this gentleman would be a remarkable success as a lawyer, especially in court practice. The other gentleman would be a remarkable success as a lawyer, but his particular field would be the preparation of cases and the giving of counsel to clients. Therefore," she went on, "they would be particularly fitted to work together as partners not only because they complement each other professionally but because their dispositions are such that they would naturally admire and respect each other."

As she said this the audience broke into a storm of applause, and upon inquiry I learned that the two men were indeed lawyers and partners, that they had been partners for twenty years, and were well known in Pittsburg for their intense affection for each other and for the fact that during their twenty years' partnership they had never had a disagreement. One was the brilliant trial lawyer, the other the student and counselor, and as a team they were remarkably successful.

* * * * *

When the lecture was over it didn't take me long to get up to the platform and inquire as to how I could learn more about character reading, and I found that Dr. Blackford had just completed a popular Course that explained the whole thing and which would be sent on approval, without charge, for examination. I immediately wrote the publishers and received the Course by return mail.

And when it came I was surprised—for here were the principles in seven fascinating lessons. No hard study—no tiresome drudgery, just interesting pictures and simple directions.

Why, the very first lesson taught me pointers I could use right away, and it was only a matter of a few weeks before I was able in a quick but careful survey to estimate the character of a man by his features.

And what a revelation it was! For the first time I really knew people whom I thought I had known for years. It hardly seemed possible that I could have made such mistakes as I did before I heard of Dr. Blackford.

People took on a new interest. Instead of just "blanks" each one became a definite personality with qualities, tastes and traits which I was always able to "spot." Why, the very act of meeting people became a fascinating pastime. And how much more clearly my own character loomed up to me. I knew as never before my limitations and my capabilities.

But it has been in my contact with people in business that my new faculty has helped me most—to say that it has been worth thousands of dollars to me is to put it mildly. It has helped me to select a new partner who has proved the best help a man ever had—it has made it possible for us to build up a most efficient "frictionless" organization for our line of business with every man in the right job—it has been the means of my securing thousands of dollars' worth of business from men I had never been able to sell before because I hadn't judged them correctly, for, after all, salesmanship is more in knowing the man you're dealing with than in any other one thing—and what I've learned from Dr. Blackford's lessons enables me to know a great deal about a man the first time I meet him.

Is it any wonder that such concerns as the Scott Paper Company, the Baker-Vawter Company, the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, and others have sought Dr. Blackford as counselor; or that thousands of heads of large corporations, salesmen, engineers, physicians, bankers and educators have studied her Course and say that the benefit derived is worth thousands of dollars to them?

"April," by Charles W. Hawthorne. (At the Macbeth Galleries.)

convincing structure and growth of the tree trunks and branches. The parts are good, but it is the fused whole that gives you the enchanting sense of joy and well-being that you would receive from the beautiful scene itself. Mr. Davis has painted many bigger pictures and pictures that are more "important" from the salesroom point of view, he has painted nothing better from the point of view of those who can say with Landor: "Nature I loved, and after nature art."

Mr. Dougherty also has one picture in the exhibition that overtops the others—his fine "Backrush." The climbing curve of the water is the springing line on which the Gothic architects built to the glory of their art, and the color has the peculiar tonic quality that suggests the tang of salt in the air, and the chill of the water.

In another room are a few recent paintings by C. W. Hawthorne. One of these is an interior with a sewing woman and the stuffed model used by inexpert dressmakers to give their patrons fits. This model with its inflexible redundant curves might have been made to play into an amusing linear scheme, but Mr. Hawthorne obviously hated it too much to pay it that respect, and it forces its way obstrusively into the composition, a menace to an otherwise charming arrangement. The figure of the sewing woman, spectacled, a trifle gaunt, and deeply absorbed, is an admirable piece of characterization, and the handsome, slightly prim room, flooded with a sweet, cool sunlight, is lovingly painted.

This quality of tenderness is found also in the picture of a young girl which he calls "April," and which he endows with April's certain loveliness. The other paintings are in a more characteristic vein.

Gifford Beal and Randall Davey.

Mr. Davey and Mr. Beal have both paintings and drawings on view at Mrs. H. P. Whitney's studio. Each is at his best in the drawings, although Mr. Davey's "Girl in Green" has a material richness and a quality of color that make it interesting to look at. But his Havana drawings are more interesting. Pascin also has been in Havana or somewhere like that if there is another place of the kind. He saw the natives with an eye that picked out their barbaric simplicity. None of their complicated rhythms hid that fierce simplicity, that concentration of interest upon primeval sensations. Pascin made his acid comment and passed on. Mr. Davey lingers longer over the novel scenes. He sees more and a little less. He is a kinder guest and sophisticates here and there. But he sits down to his feast with the fine gusto of the tourist accepting unfamiliar flavors that would arouse suspicion if created by the genius of the home kitchen.

In Mr. Beal's fishermen's cottages and village stores and ship yards and circuses one gets America pure and simple, as it is in New England and as New Englander's not unjustifiably think it should be everywhere. Havana in art makes us love New England—in art. And it is excellent to have both in one exhibition, and to be able to take one's time to it. It lasts until Feb. 15.

Persian Textiles.

The publication recently issued by H. C. Perleburg, fifty photographic prints of Persian textiles from originals in private or museum possession, with an introduction by John Cotton Dana of the Newark Museum Association, is dedicated by its publisher to "all who are trying to help the development and improvement of the industrial arts in America." Mr. Perleberg adds: "The appropriate application of art to industry means both the betterment of products and the betterment of that appreciation or choice in the field of art in general which we call 'taste.'"

The plates include Cashmere, Paisley, and Persian tapestries and shawls, the Paisley weaves included as derivations from the Cashmere fabrics, and as particularly desired by the manufacturers of today who find that in most instances the motives and suggestions offered by the Paisleys give them more aid than can be drawn from the originals.

In his introduction Mr. Dana calls special attention to the fact that two museums have helped the publisher to make his book by permitting him to take textiles from their collections and carry them to his studio to be photographed, an apparently simple and obvious thing to do, but in reality made possible only by the suspension of an almost invariable rule of museum seclusion. "The traditions and rules," he says, "that naturally, and almost of necessity grow up as a great museum like the Metropolitan gathers, from year to year, priceless and often irreplaceable objects, are of the severest. Directors, curators, and trustees no doubt regret their presence and their strength even more than does the general public, for they realize fully how easily and how greatly the economic and industrial value of many of the treasures in their charge would be extended could they be exploited in a proper manner by reputable publishers. This modest volume of photographs, for example, will bring to makers of textiles a group of suggestions for their designers which it would be quite difficult and quite expensive for them to obtain by sending draftsmen to the museums in which the originals are found."

The action of the Metropolitan Museum in this instance is only one example among many of the courage and independence of its staff in making the treasure useful to the public. The point of view adopted apparently is that however valuable, beautiful, and "important" a work of art may be its importance, at least, is greatly increased by its accessibility, and that if it is kept in rigorous seclusion it becomes in a certain sense a dead object, deprived of its true function of sending inspiration through the living world by all available channels of communication.

The Art Students' League of New York begs to announce an exhibition of original illustrations by Captain Wallace Morgan, Official War Artist at the Front, to be held in the league rooms, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street, to Feb. 8, inclusive.

Drawings from Morgan Collection.

John Pierpont Morgan has lent drawings from the Morgan collection to the Prints Division of the New York Library for exhibition, and they may be seen in the Print Gallery, Room 321, until the end of April. Mr. Weitenkampf says in his notes on the exhibition:

Primarily, drawings make their strong appeal through the sense which they give of intimate view of the artists' methods, a fact emphasized by various writers—Chateaubriand, for example, and Sidney Colvin. In looking at them we are, so to speak, looking over the artist's shoulder as he works. We get an insight into his attitude toward life and art at times when he may be troubled little or not at all by direct thoughts of the public.

The technical element in such an exhibition of drawings should appeal particularly to the art student. How the masters handled pen, chalk, and brush in making studies and sketches offers the student suggestion and stimulation and example. Here he may see how Rembrandt scratched and scrawled with the pen, or put in big broad washes, or brushed light lines in landscape subjects, (similar to his etched ones,) according to need and mood, and always with a sufficiency appropriate to the subject in hand. Or how Raphael used sharp yet sinuous lines, limited in number; the thing said, he stopped. Again, how methods are varied by the facile Guercino, or by Annibale Carracci, who made one drawing carefully in strong masses with red chalk, and another in light pen outlines and washes. How in some work all is delicacy, evanescing ultimately into weakness, while in others all is firm and vigorous, a quality eventually leading, in some artists, to exaggerated poses and hypertrophied muscular development. Some made more finished drawings: Claude and Poussin in stately landscape compositions; Correggio and Guercino (in red chalk drawings of putti and other subjects) and Picart foreshadowing the methods of the nineteenth century professional lithographer; others again, in brush-washes of one or two tones, heightened with white, akin to the chiaroscuro method in engraving. There is wide variety in the use of wash. Bramantino, Annibale Carracci, Pietro Testa, G. B. Tiepolo and others applied it lightly to give body to freely indicated outlines. Tiepolo did this with a particularly noteworthy lightness and dash, his shadows flickering in a remarkable suggestion of ever-moving life. Somewhat heavier shadows and tones appear in some work by Palma Giovane or Pordenone. Polidoro, Parmigiano, Vanni, and others carry the method quite to a finished effect, and it is the reproduction of such work that we find in chiaroscuro prints.

Leonard Wood. Three things have brought his name forward; first, that as a close friend of Roosevelt he shared his ideas; second, the feeling that jealousy of his ability as an organizer and administrator kept him from an opportunity in France; third, as the father of the Plattsburg idea and foremost advocate of preparedness, the opinion that his country owes him a debt not yet paid. General Wood as a possibility depends more on the turn of events than any other one mentioned. If the course of affairs between now and the convention should point to the need of military preparedness, in the absence of some stabilizing league, then General Wood surely would loom up.

The progressive wing of the Republican Party is represented by Senator Borah. He led the opposition to Senator Penrose in the new Senate committee assignments that came up immediately after the election. In variance to many of his Republican colleagues, he is in favor of the withdrawal of our troops from Russia and absolute non-interference in Russia, leaving that country to work out its problems in its own way. He is against the Taft plan for a League of Nations or any league that would compromise the sovereignty of the United States in any way. In a scheme of an enforced peace he sees "militarism in its most pronounced form."

"Naturally," said Senator Borah, "the first question that a man would ask would be: 'How are you going to raise your armies to sustain this vast military program based on force?' Would the citizens of the United States volunteer to enter the army for the purpose of settling difficulties in the Balkans, for instance? Would the American boys leave their homes on the farms and in the factories for the purpose of taking part in the adjustment of a controversy between Japan and Russia over in Manchuria? In other words, we should have conscription in time of peace."

Mr. Borah's chance of leadership depends on what popular appeal the ideas he stands for may have. Among his Republican colleagues in the Senate his course is regarded as one of extreme independence.

Senator Johnson would no doubt have the support of his State for the Presidential nomination, but his name is more often heard as that of the nominee for Vice President. In the talk of Washington he has recently been coupled with Taft for second place on the ticket. His views have been too radical, it is said, for him to have a very good chance to get the support of the conservative wing of his party for first place on the ticket. He is an advocate of the Government ownership of railroads. Recently he has been most active in urging that our troops be withdrawn from Russia.

Among the Governors mentioned as having a "look in," Governor Louden of Illinois, former member of Congress, holds first place. His course during the war as Governor has done much to strengthen him. He called out the troops to prevent the pacifists from meeting in Chicago, forestalling Mayor Thompson, who was in favor of the meeting.

Other Governors mentioned are James P. Goodrich of Indiana, who has the achievement of recent State tax legislation to his credit, and Henry J. Allen of Kansas, who followed Roosevelt into the Progressive Party in 1912, and who, while absent with the soldiers in France, was elected Governor by a majority of 150,000.

Of the new members of the Senate two will be specially watched as to the part they play—Arthur Capper, who moves up from Governor of Kansas, and Medill McCormick, one of Roosevelt's strongest supporters, who advances to the Senate from a seat in the Lower House.

In the longer list of more remote possibilities are Senator Miles Poindexter of Washington, who has taken the lead in favor of the suppression of Bolshevism; Senator James E. Watson of Indiana, a prominent advocate of a high tariff, which will certainly be one of the chief issues raised by the Republican Party in the coming campaign, and Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr., of New York, who by his grasp of the problems of war legislation has won his way to a first place among the younger men of the Senate. Two men of recognized leadership ability are regarded as eliminated on account of their age. They are Senator Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts, who will be seventy on his next birthday, and Elihu Root, ex-Secretary of State in Roosevelt's Cabinet, who is past seventy. Charles E. Hughes, while his value as a leader is recognized, is little spoken of as a possibility in 1920.

"I think," said a Republican Senator who occupies a middle ground, "that the choice of a man in Roosevelt's place depends a great deal on what issues rise to dominance in 1920. The establishment of a League of Nations, for example, may remove some of the questions that seem most pressing. In my opinion, one issue is going to thrust aside all others—that is the relation between capital and labor. Whoever can come forward with a successful plan to provide a harmonious co-operation will be assured not only of the Republican nomination, but also of election to the Presidency. I think one of the requirements to take up such a problem is the possession of exceptional business ability. Our problems, as they stand out today, are at bottom business problems. A new kind of statesmanship is needed; some one with the mind to grasp such complicated problems as that of our railroads; a man who can give a sympathetic consideration to the sides of both the employes and the employers; who can make clear that dominance by any class is against the spirit of democracy."

New Poland to be a First-Class Power

as you have created, and which has now continued for six years, is a manifestation of hatred which grows by what it feeds upon. You have introduced poison into the system of the Polish people, who, you say, had previously been free from prejudice against the Jews. This poison works day and night. It becomes more virulent as the years go on. It is subtle and insidious in its operation. It passes beyond the control of him who first administered it, and in the end is destructive, not only of the immediate victim, but of those in whom the venom has been engendered.

Mr. Marshall reports that Dmowski walked up and down the room while he was talking, and then said: "While I fully appreciate all that you say, if I were now suddenly to change front and to deal with the boycott as you suggest, my party would immediately say that I was bought."

"But," he said, "I am sure that if the New Poland is created, with all of the resources that it would have, we should occupy almost the same position as does the United States, because we could then take care of all of our people and there would be no such conflict of interests as that which now exists."

As an indirect outcome of these conversations, it was agreed that a mixed investigating commission from America should visit Poland, to consist of two Poles, two Jews, and one or two Americans. This is apart from an advisory commission to be sent by the National Civic Federation and another investigating commission from the Supreme Council at Paris.

Polish and Jewish organizations in this country reconciled their differences, at least to the extent of uniting on relief measures; and the ship Westward Ho, which sailed the other day from New York to Danzig, bore $2,000,000 worth of food for suffering Jews and Poles alike. The money was contributed by the people of those races in America, a large part of it in small sums saved from workers' wages.

Almost simultaneously Henry P. Davison announced at the Red Cross headquarters in Washington that a relief expedition, amply equipped, would be sent at once into Poland. This action was taken after Vernon Kellogg, specially delegated to investigate conditions there, had reported to Herbert Hoover in Paris that he himself had seen children starving in Lemberg, and had told of the pathetic situation elsewhere. Mr. Davison announced that urgent action was necessary "in the light of authentic and most appalling information," and added: "The opportunity for service also comes at a particularly happy moment, when Paderewski, whom the American people know so well, is arranging, with apparent success, to establish an orderly Government in his country."

Paderewski's attitude toward the Bolsheviki was made clear at a luncheon given by the National Civic Federation in New York several months ago. His address, given without notes, was transcribed stenographically, but the portion dealing with the Russian situation has not been printed. The speaker had dwelt at length on Germany's ambitions in the Near and Far East, and the riches, largely untouched, which would be open to her there unless measures were taken to prevent it.

"What is the way to prevent Germany from carrying out her designs?" he continued. "There is no other way but by separating Russia from Germany. You have no real notion about Russia. You think that country is ready for a democratic government. Russia is not ready for a democratic government, because democracy belongs only to civilized humanity. Russia has been kept purposely for centuries by the Prussians in utter ignorance, because Germans have this theory, which is very flattering to them, but rather offensive to humanity: 'We are a people of masters!' ('Wir sind ein Herren Volk!') And they look upon the other nations as 'fertilizing' people—people preparing the ground for the growth of a 'nation of masters.' Russia is exactly that fertilizer for the Germans. * * *

"This nation for seventeen months has not been able to produce one single strong man, one single character; for we cannot consider as characters Lenine and Trotzky or their collaborators. They do not represent the people. They simply represent anarchy. The entire revolution of Russia is not the expression of what you are perhaps inclined to believe, the desire of a long oppressed people to emancipate themselves from the yoke of an oppressor, the desire to create something liberal, something for the uplifting and betterment of humanity. No, it is simply an expression of primitive racial instinct—destruction, murder, intoxication, crimes of all kinds.

"Such people must, first of all, be isolated from that pernicious ambition, that pernicious influence, of the Germans, and they must be educated. Then there will be some hope and some ground for democracy in Russia. As it is now, they are nothing but a 'fertilizer' people, as the Germans wished them to be.

"The only way in which to separate Russia from Germany is by creating a powerful Polish State, because what some people here are intending to do is nothing but a palliative. Now, if you, with your preponderance of power to dictate to Europe, if you do not create a powerful Polish State, you, as well as all Europe, will be doomed. There is no use and no sense in attempting to create a series of small, not-too-strong national States, as the Germans hope will be done, * * * a small Lithuania, a small Poland, a small Rumania.

"Why? Because it is much easier to swallow an artichoke, leaf by leaf, than to swallow it all at once."

The Birth of Sinn Fein By One Who Was There

How It Held Its First Meeting---How Its Charter Members Rudely Questioned John Redmond---How He Banged the Table---How Shocked George Moore Was

Seumas MacManus, author of this article, was one of a handful of Irish present at a meeting sixteen years ago where the Sinn Fein Party came into being as a protest against John Redmond's Irish Nationalist Party.

By SEUMAS MacMANUS.

THE first meeting of those terrible Irish Bolsheviki, who, a little later, [illegible] Fein, and—just think of it!—actually asked for freedom for their country! took place about sixteen years ago. And—tell it not in Gath!—a prime instigator of that first meeting of those deplorable persons was George Moore!

That was shortly after the time when George made the world gasp by the alarming announcement that he was shaking from his shoes the dirt of London and carrying his glory over to bequeath it upon Ireland—which should henceforth be the centre of the universe.

I turn from my narrative, for a moment, to record, for the benefit of the future historian, the amazing fact that, on the great morning on which the repatriate, enwrapt in his radiance, stepped from his ship upon the land that was now to be immortal, the cocks crew at the usual hour, on their usual note, and the keenest observer (to wit, the New Arrival) could not detect the faintest ripple disturbing the provokingly placid current of Irish life.

But to our Sinn Fein.

It was shortly after the foregoing singular happening that I, in my Donegal mountain cottage, one Saturday morning received a telegram, which read:

"Want you without fail to be at my house 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Meet Moore, Griffith, and others, for very important conference.

"MAUD GONNE."

At that time either a King or a Queen of England (I forget which) had threatened a visit upon Ireland—and there was a well-founded rumor abroad that the Government was making with poor Redmond another of those slick deals by which they were regularly getting use of him, without his ever getting the promised quid pro quo.

Though the Irish Parliamentary Party machine was then going in perfect order, and Mr. Redmond had three-fourths of all Nationalist Ireland (among which I was not) believing he was fighting for Irish independence, there was some grumbling among many, even of the most faithful, in that he did not allay harmful rumors by an announcement that the threatened visitor was to receive just exactly the same respect as any other well-conducted stranger touring our country. I very well suspected that Maud Gonne's conference was called to deal with this subject. And I was correct.

When I reached Miss Gonne's cottage (next door, by the way, to that of "A. E.") in one of the pleasant suburbs of Dublin, she informed me they were much alarmed lest Irish national principle should be compromised by a misleader, for what seemed to him to be a little material advantage. With some merriment she remarked that George Moore terribly in earnest in his brand-new Nationalism, was particularly upset lest any appreciable portion of the Irish people should be misled into giving a reception to the King of England (we'll suppose it to be the King,)—something which they had not even given to Mr. Moore—and he had suggested her having a conference of some of the bolder spirits (among whom he evidently reckoned himself) for formulating a plan to upset Mr. Redmond's deal.

In Miss Gonne's parlor, with walls wonderfully painted by the poet, "A. E.," with pictures of the strangely beautiful spirits which he saw and communed with, I found already assembled Edward Martyn, (whom George Moore has immortalized in his books,) Arthur Griffith, Henry Dixon, Alderman Tom Kelly, and George Russell, ("A. E.") Hamlet only was missing. After we had waited a reasonable time and had at length audaciously concluded to go ahead without the Prince of Denmark, we heard the knocker of the door resound—and Miss Gonne [illegible] in the redoubtable George Moore, spick and span, and exhibiting perfection in every slightest detail. (How could he ever affect to consort with Bohemians?)

He stuck to his hat and his cane, as if one held, and the other guarded, his reputation, while he was in this company of moral banditti. They could not be coaxed nor coerced from him. Neither could he be wheedled nor forced into a seat. He was as uneasy as a hen on a hot griddle. Having recklessly taken a header into Irish nationalism the day before, he now seemed suffering the remorse of a man who had given way to a shameful drunk, and just got out of it.

Professor Edward de Valera, Sinn Fein Leader, Delivering an Address in Dublin.

Anyhow, the hopes with which George had slept last night were drunk. He explained to us that he had carefully thought things over—after all, he was a literary man, not a politician—this kind of thing was not for him to take active part in—he was sure we perfectly understood—he sympathized with us—and—and—good day! good day! good day, Miss Gonne and gentlemen! The faultlessly tailored and barbered Franco-Brito-Hibernian genius bowed himself out of the room, and out of national and international politics. Almost, that is. Which "almost" I'll explain later.

Miss Gonne was disgusted, Edward Martyn enraged, and the rest of the company heartily amused by George Moore's newest comedy.

When Martyn's ruffled feelings had been smoothed, we got to business. We were aware that, for the Tuesday night following, the faithful had been summoned to meet, to hear, to indorse, and—chiefly—to finance Mr. Redmond and his Parliamentary Party in the great hall of the Dublin Rotunda. The annual party collection was thus inaugurated, by jamming the Dublin shopkeepers with wind while the flakes were being artistically peeled from their pocketbooks. And the handsome start that the Dubliners gave to the party funds that night was, of course, to be followed, next day, by all Ireland. Therefore, we decided that the Rotunda stage, and Tuesday night, were the place and the time to compel from Mr. Redmond a commentary upon the King of England's coming.

George T. Russell, ("A. E.") One of the Founders of the Sinn Fein.

Miss Maud Gonne, Edward Martyn, Henry Dixon, and Tom Kelly were agreed upon as an uninvited delegation that [illegible] the stage of the Rotunda in the middle of the proceedings, and invite Mr. Redmond and the Parliamentary Party to suspend the proceedings until they had asked, and he answered, a question vital to Irish nationhood. We knew it would be a most provoking, disorderly proceeding—but some such action was needed to block the [illegible] To give the delegation some show of authority, we, one woman and six men, in a little cottage in Rathgar that afternoon, formed the Irish National Council—which was destined to make some Irish history.

On Tuesday evening I was walking down O'Connell Street with a friend—en route for a point of vantage in the gallery of the Rotunda—when I met Henry Dixon, hastening and breathless, who told me he had been searching for me; that the delegation was waiting for me outside the Rotunda that they had, on Sunday afternoon, overlooked the fact that I (who, it seems, had suggested the delegates) had adroitly left myself off the honor roll, and insisted that I must join them, and take my chances of death or glory with the rest.

I had to agree. Until the meeting got under way we took seats on the floor, convenient to the door. When the proceedings started we went out and around into the anteroom, off the stage, there waiting until Mr. Redmond had well begun his speech of the evening. I think that Tim Harrington was Lord Mayor of Dublin at the time, and was in the chair. All the rest of the party, about eighty-odd Members of Parliament, were banked in rows, like so many flourishing geraniums in a hothouse, behind Redmond and Harrington, upon the platform.

When Redmond's fine voice was reaching to every corner of the great and well-filled Rotunda, and every eye and ear was with him, a tall, elegant, beautiful woman and four hulking men made unexpected and resounding entrance upon the stage and marched like a picket-guard to the table in the centre.

The audience gasped. The orator, in astonishment, ceased to orate. Tim Harrington jumped from his seat, seizing hold of the chair as the handiest resenter of a holdup, and eighty members of Parliament emitted eighty different notes of pain, amazement, resentment, and rage.

Then for some moments there befell a dead silence in the great Rotunda. Mr. Redmond's gentlemanly instincts asserted themselves through his dumfoundment, and, though he loved Miss Gonne as a rat loves a cat, he turned and politely tendered to that towering lady his own chair, which she, with Queenly grace, refused, saying that we had come not to sit, but to transact a little business—to put to him an important question, and get from him an answer.

The eighty-odd members of Parliament jumped to their feet, and all spoke at one time, commanding that we should be thrown out. At least a thousand of the audience were on their feet, too, preferring the request that we be handed down to them. Mr. Redmond, with a wave of his hand, stilling the storm that was behind him, and the storm that was before, asked for the questioning to be deferred. We unanimously answered "No!" An encouragingly large portion of the audience answered "No," too, in our support. But by far the larger portion roared an enraged "Yes!"

Maud Gonne deliberately put her question, asking Mr. Redmond whether he would advise his followers to receive or to ignore the King of England on his forthcoming visit.

Mr. Redmond, striking the table a terrible blow, roared his refusal to yield his mind to the demand of brigands! We audaciously closed in on him, insisting that we would not yield our position until he gave definite answer.

Then bedlam brooke loose! Eighty members of Parliament, seizing hold of their chairs, as being the only offensive items at hand, bore down upon us from the left. From the right, on the floor below, several hundreds—or thousands—of devoted-to-death disciples of Mr. Redmond were climbing over each other in a fierce effort to reach, and to teach, us. We occupied a most perilous position, on the edge of a very high platform—between the raging Parliamentary devil and the surging Dublin deep sea. Other several hundreds who revolted at Mr. Redmond's refusal to answer the pertinent question asked him, reached and stormed the further end of the platform with intention to succor and rescue us, though we had done a reckless thing (because the occasion demanded recklessness) and were, of course, prepared to take the certain consequences. Take and give.

On that memorable night the great annual public meeting of the Irish Parliamentary Party, called for the starting of the Parliamentary Fund, was ended before it was well begun. There was no more meeting that night and no fund. The press of the three kingdoms next morning blazoned forth the exciting account of the first Redmondite revolt! From that night forward Mr. Redmond and his party, self-convicted of duplicity, never afterward faced an open meeting in Dublin. From that time Mr. Redmond and the party began shedding their following, began the slow disintegration which resulted last month in their final disappearance from Ireland's political map.

A week later—without Mr. Moore, who was in congenial retirement, and also without "A. E.," who dropped out—the infant National Council held a meet-

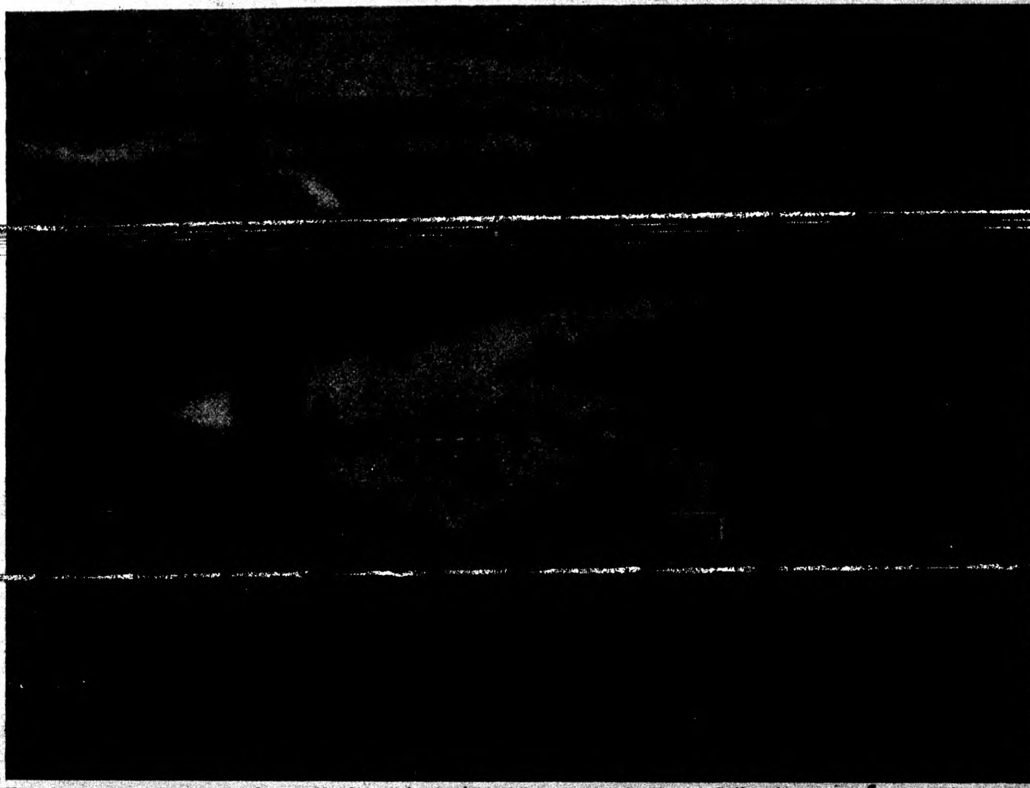
The Golden Period of Book Illustration

Art at Home and Abroad



"Jersey Meadows," by Samuel Halpert. (At the Daniel Gallery.)

ILLUSTRATED books are seldom placed in the category of art today, although a small proportion of them deserve to be. But if we turn back to the late fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries and examine such specimens of illustration as the present exhibition of "Early Printed Liturgical Books" in the galleries of the Grolier Club provides for us, we find a sort of art that drives straight home to our sense of beauty and demands applause by its splendid sanity and vigor.

There are two copies of the great missal printed for the Monks of Vallombrosa by Gumba of Venice in 1503, a Greek Psalter printed by Aldus in 1497, with a particularly gracious little version of the Annunciation, and the "Treatise of the Mass." by Savonarola, printed by Sibri during the last decade of the fifteenth century and containing one of the loveliest woodcuts of the period. There are also fine and rare examples of German book illustration of the Duerer period and earlier.

The larger part of the exhibition, however, is given to the Parisian Horae characterized by Mr. Ivins as in many cases "a cheerful combination of prayer-book, old farmer's almanac, and first reading book." The inexhaustible entertainment provided by these profusely illustrated books of hours clearly demonstrates the possibility of creating variety and interest within the strictest limitations of subject and convention. The same subject comes almost always in the same place according to the traditions fixed by the earlier miniatures. But the clever artists found innumerable opportunities to introduce novelties of detail and composition, and it becomes a kind of game to search out the variations through the long array of prints illustrating a single subject.

Take, for example, the annunciation to the shepherds. Pigouchet has two versions of the scene, the earlier showing a group of shepherds with the clownish rustic aspect of the Chaucerian type to whom large-nosed angels in robes that twist upward at the ends like a Hohenzollern mustache appear in the heavens. A hillside slopes sharply downward diagonally across the composition, and the figures are cut off by the ornamental framework surrounding the central panel. The later version is much more elaborate and bland. A couple of Gothic arches are features of the ornamental frame, and the landscape and figures are seen as through a double doorway. There are ladies with the shepherds and a little dog's alert head rises above the line of the ever present hillside and is seen against the background of a little town. This version is seen in two copies, one colored, and the colorist has obliterated the little perky dog and introduced instead a line of small trees following the contour of the hill.

In the illustration by Pierre le Rouge is one lady silhouetted against the sky while the shepherds are seen against the background of the hill which is sprinkled with clumps of pre-Raphaelite flowers as in the mediaeval tapestries, and the sheep are all grouped in the foreground instead of straying over the middle distance as in most versions.

Etienne Jehannot's 1495 illustration is arranged in crosswise stripes, one above another. On the top tier are three angels, the middle tier is given to three important shepherds, and below is a row of minor personages looking up. At either side is a veritable William Morris tree. A beautiful composition with a rhythmic play of line is that made for Vostre in 1505, and another, later and very elaborate, without the dignified architectural frame, shows beside the hillside and the distant town some nearer buildings with a little dooryard inclosed by a wattled fence, two women stylishly dressed are chatting close at hand, indifferent to the drama going on among the shepherds, nor are these overenthusiastic. One clumsy fellow is lying on his face drinking from a stream, there is a dog, and the ground is dappled with flowers. The picture is drawn with a very open line, and there is a sense of spaciousness and order in the arrangement in spite of the abundant detail.

The 1520 Kerver shows the influence of German models, and to balance the heaviness of the forms we have more ardor in the gestures of those to whom the sign appears. The shepherd subject could be followed through many more versions, each indicating a certain originality in the artist even where he is frankly copying others. It is an exhibition confined to no one class of gallery visitor. Booklover and art lover and the least initiated of the public may be certain of finding his account, either in the amusing candor and simplicity of the expression or the integrity of the art.

Paintings by Samuel Halpert.

The exhibition of recent paintings by Samuel Halpert at the Daniel Gallery shows modernist painting at its strongest. There is a stimulating absence of pretense about Mr. Halpert's work. It would be quite impossible for the most prejudiced reactionary to question its sincerity. The very titles of his pictures have a certain directness encouraging to a public accustomed to the mystifications of the late nineteenth century. If he calls a picture "Sunflowers" you may be sure that these sturdy blossoms are frankly to the fore, and not lurking in an almost invisible distance. If he calls his picture "Bowl of Fruit" or "The Open Window" or "The Breakfast Table" it is just that and satisfactorily manifest.

His compositions are, nevertheless, unexpected. He places his bowl of fruit against a splendid fabric in which the pattern plays an important rôle in the whole arrangement. All his backgrounds are based on the stock company ideal of the modern (and ancient) masters. No matter how small the part the talent spent upon it is of the best.

"The Open Window" is an example of Mr. Halpert's most intimately personal style. No other than he would have used that harsh blue-green with that curdling violet and brazen yellow. No other than he would have forced these colors to yield a clanging, powerful harmony that compels your interest in defiance of your taste for a warmer and more conciliating appeal. One feels in the presence of some ferocious mountain landscape of Northern Spain with these bleak colors and rugged forms. Yet with what science he has led the color scheme through its middle range to the high, pure note of the pallid sky. How skillfully he has managed his transitions, and what a noble unity he has achieved. The more personal antagonism the picture inspiries the more constraint it places upon one to admit its great merits.

Another picture which is called simply "Still Life," equally salient in its direct expression with the brush and far richer and more consoling in color, deals with a Spanish jug, broken, but regal, a Winter landscape without and a flowered curtain and pink book within. It is not for nothing that Mr. Halpert has seen the acid carnations of the Spaniards, and in this picture he has achieved the old dignity of Spain without compromising his modern spirit.

"Jersey Meadows" is a view of the Hackensack River flowing, a stream of molten gold, through an Arcadian landscape. New Jersey or Toledo—what does it matter if the artist's vision has distinction and his brush the grand manner? It is very worth while for the public to see Mr. Halpert's exhibition if only to note how possible it is for a man to break with conventions and still keep to the great traditions, to be individual without becoming eccentric, to play in the same garden with the other modernists and maintain sanity and a muscular style. There are others to keep him company, but, of course, the artists of any school who escape the mannerisms and defects of their group are in the minority. The exhibition lasts until Feb. 8.

New Pictures by Gari Melchers.

At the Montross Gallery this week and next, Gari Melchers. Always painter and draftsman, Mr. Melchers is most triumphantly both in his big picture of a "Young Woman at Her Toilet"—how many young women thus occupied we find in the long history of art! The way Mr. Melchers puts it recalls the draftsmanship of the old Italians. The rightness of the planes of the figures and their complete expression of its volume might be envied by the most cubistic of the moderns. But within the boundaries of these great planes are a hundred subtleties of form. The young, heavy face framed in bright hair is filled with strong life. Behind the figure is a beautiful bit of painting in black and white in the gown and apron of the attendant. And in the painting of the flesh is the pulse of life.

Another picture is called "Laughing Nude," with a minimum of relation between the title and the expression on the upturned face of the reclining woman. Again draftsmanship is the ruling power. The rectangle of the chest juts out with superb authority, the foreshortened head is drawn with a ruthless sincerity. You think not at all of style, only of nature, in these plastic forms, but in the larger picture the arabesque of line is vigorous and rich.

The conspicuous feature of the exhibition is the brilliant "Drummer—First Royal Scots," a drummer of parade belonging with the retinue; the "Child with Orange" is a very simple, rather charming arrangement of color; there are flower subjects and landscapes, each sufficiently worthy of the brush that painted it, but nothing competes with the splendid dispassionate realism of the two nudes.

Charles H. Davis, Paul Dougherty, and Charles W. Hawthorne.

At the Macbeth Galleries the inner room is occupied by the work of Charles H. Davis and Paul Dougherty. The landscapes of the former vary in interest, the painter obviously having his favorites among the subjects he selects. You may say that the tremulous little scene with a title that precisely fits it—"Now April's Here"—is ingratiating and that "Out of the Gray Wood" conveys something of the romantic charm of a shadowy grove, but nothing checks your easy pace about the gallery until you come to the "Hillside Oak." There you stop and stay. It is not merely the fine relation between the russet of the trees and the turquoise of the sky, nor yet the East of Suez—The Last Oasis

Even if Everywhere Else Goes Dry, the Orient Hasn't the Least Present Prospect of Living Without Alcoholic Aids to Contentment

By RALPH H. TURNER.

"THEY drink between drinks!" exclaimed Jack London in one of his adventurous South Sea yarns. London's reference was to the life led by the foreign inhabitants on one of the Pacific's tropical isles. His statement was in strong support of the oft-told wickedness of the Orient, where restraint, in large measure, is removed from the life of the white man.

In prose and poetry, since the days when the Orient was opened to foreign intercourse, the lure embodied in the vague "Call of the East" has been inevitably associated with the cheer of the flowing bowl. The tales of tourists, the yarns of men who go down to the sea in ships, the experiences of foreign consuls and commercial travelers have added a generous splash of color to the picture. There has been much exaggeration, no doubt, in stories that depict the sinful phases of the Far East, but this much may be said in truthful conservatism: While the prohibitionists, triumphant in America, may succeed some day in creating a wholly boozeless world, the Orient probably will be the last bit of the map to succumb to the force of "The Dry Mystery."

Doesn't Kipling sing:

> Ship me somewheres east o' Suez, where > the best is like the worst,
> Where there aren't no Ten Commandments an' a man can raise a thirst.

Well, it's safe to say that the present generation, at least, can continue to raise a thirst "east o' Suez"—and, what's more, can quench it. This business of raising a thirst and the consequent procedure is such a natural, unassumed institution in the Orient.

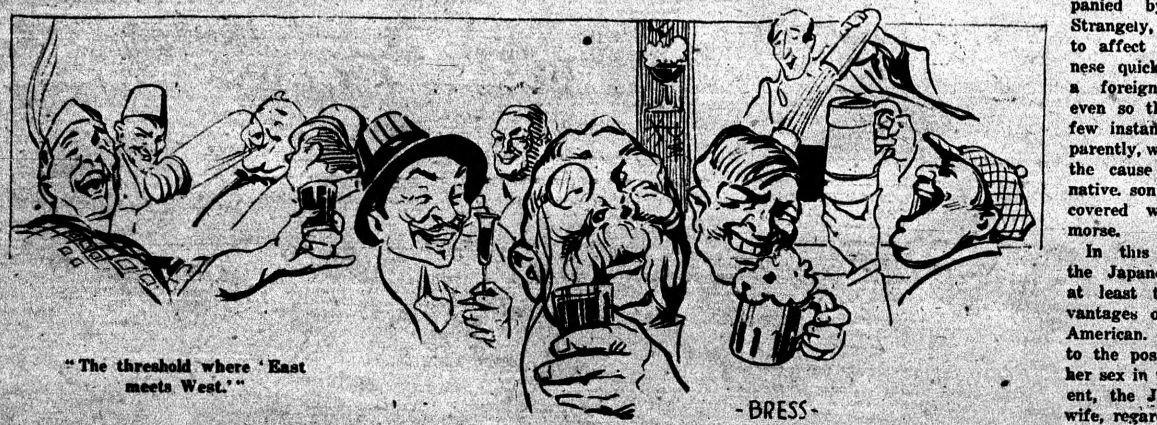
"My, but it's a delightful place!" an American girl remarked not long ago in speaking of the hotel known to all travelers who pass through Seoul, the capital of Korea. This girl had just returned from several years' residence in the East. Possibly she was hearing it call. "On every Sunday after church," she continued in pleased reminiscence, "we used to drop in there for our cocktails. And such wonderful cocktails they were, too!"

Then there is the newspaper office in Shanghai—a newspaper published in English. Drop in there of a night and your friend is never so busy but what he'll greet you with that world-famous query, "What'll you have to drink?" It's not necessary, however, to send around the corner for your wants. He shouts "Oh, boy!"—that's the real call of the East—and an Oriental who may be 50 years old despite his designation, patters forward to take your order. Whereupon he proceeds to a corner of the room where rests a buffet containing every conceivable demand of the thirsty. It's the office bar.

"We put that in seven years ago," explains your friend, writing a headline, after you have registered surprise at the spectacle of a local room with a bar in conjunction. "There was a typhoid epidemic here at the time and we were afraid to drink the water. It was so convenient that we've continued the precaution."

The bad quality of the water may be assigned as an honest reason for liquor's popularity in many regions of the Orient. But there are other explanations. When an American, thousands of miles from home and all that that word implies, living without restraint in a strange land populated with equally strange people, meets another American in similar circumstances, it is not odd, perhaps, that their steps should lead to one of those so-called "American bars," probably labeled as such because of the brass rail adornment. The brass rail, it seems, is an American institution.

Britishers and other nationals will gather in the same way, prompted by the same impulses. And as East and West haven't been finally introduced yet, international gatherings are popular among the Occidentals, if language isn't too great a barrier. These are strongly in evidence at the hotels and clubs, where, it must be admitted, there is yet no paucity of "alcoholic beverages." Enter that famous American hotel in Yokohama, advertised as "the threshold where East meets West," and you'll see the Englishman with his "Scotch and soda," the Frenchman with his light wine, and the American—well, the American is not so apt to play favorites, but, if he so desires, an Oriental mixologist is prepared to act instantly at the command of "Manhattan" or "Bronx."



"The threshold where 'East meets West.'"

It is the club, however, which represents the most prominent centre of companionship. For the Britisher his club follows the flag just as surely as trade. The principle is true of other nationals to a lesser extent. At the clubs, usually located in the port cities, gather the foreign residents of the town—the consular crowd, the importers and the exporters, the tea buyers and the men from the shipping offices. You can't "hurry the East," so there's time aplenty for this club life. With an hour or two "off" at noon visits are easily made, but it is in the evening, with the desk closed at 5 o'clock and the dinner hour not due until 7:30 or 8 o'clock, that there comes that convivial period, the cocktail hour. 'Mid the clatter of dice and the clink of glasses, friends discuss the day's work, the gossip of the "colony," and the latest news—though it may be weeks old—from "back home." The last generally is accompanied by conjecture over the length of time before the return to "God's country"—whether that be London, New York, Rio, or Topeka.

The significance of club life in the Orient in its relation to America's "dry mystery" might be gained from a peek into the Shanghai Club, which is said to have the longest bar in the world, measuring 125 feet from stem to stern.

Time was, before the war had toned down the drinking habits of allied subjects, when national holidays were made the occasion of unbounded hospitality in the foreign clubs. If the day was King George's birthday, the Britishers were "at home" to the other members of the colony, and when the Fourth of July rolled around the Americans "set 'em up" to all comers.

It can hardly be said that there ever has been any organized prohibition movement in the Orient, and such sporadic "dry" campaigns as have been waged have made little headway. The Orient simply hasn't figured yet, speaking for the native population, that either its efficiency or its morality is lowered by alcohol. "Booze" is part of life, either for good or bad, just as the Japanese knows that both cherry blossoms and typhoons inevitably contribute to the joy or sorrow of his earthly existence. And added to their native wines the Japanese and Chinese now have the further possibilities offered by the brewed or distilled concoctions introduced from the West.

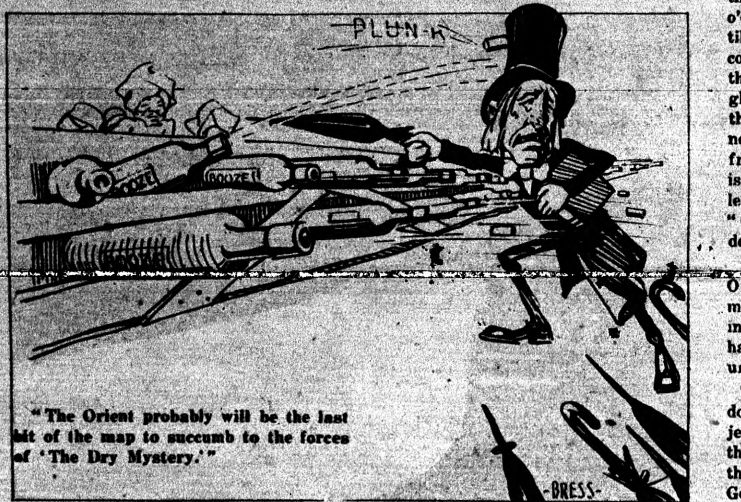
Beer, manufactured by the Japanese on the basis of German instruction, is now crowding saké, the native drink, for first place in the tea-houses. They also serve tea at these places. But despite the competition offered by beer—and whisky, too—saké is still the reigning favorite. Fermented from rice, it is a white fluid, generally taken when hot and accompanied by food. Strangely, it seems to affect a Japanese quicker than a foreigner, but even so there are few instances, apparently, when it is the cause of the native son's being covered with remorse.

In this respect the Japanese has at least two advantages over the American. Owing to the position of her sex in the Orient, the Japanese wife, regardless of the hour or the circumstances of her husband's return, rarely utters a murmur of protest. It simply isn't done. And another thing: So long as a Japanese, despite the extent of his inebriation, remains comparatively harmless and refrains from arson or other serious offense, he's practically free from the molestation of the police. I'm not sure, but I doubt very much whether "plain drunks" are ever booked in the Tokio police courts.

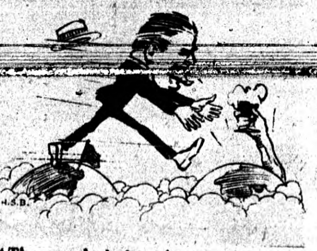
Now we're told that American brewers, ousted from their homeland, are going to the Orient with their amber fluid. But they needn't think they're showing the Oriental anything new in beverages. Japanese beer, besides being sold at home, long since invaded the China market. Before the war the Germans were in the field, and when the rumblings of prohibition first became portentous one American brewery, at least, began marketing its product on an extensive scale in China.

If these American brewers set up their own plants in the Orient they may be assured of quicker success in overcoming competition. For imported beer, shipped across the ocean, meets many a complaint. One student of the subject has declared too much preservative was required. It also has been suggested that the tossing of a boat for two or three weeks of transpacific voyage constituted a violent injury to the beer cargo in the hold. At any rate, there's a subject for the brewer's investigation.

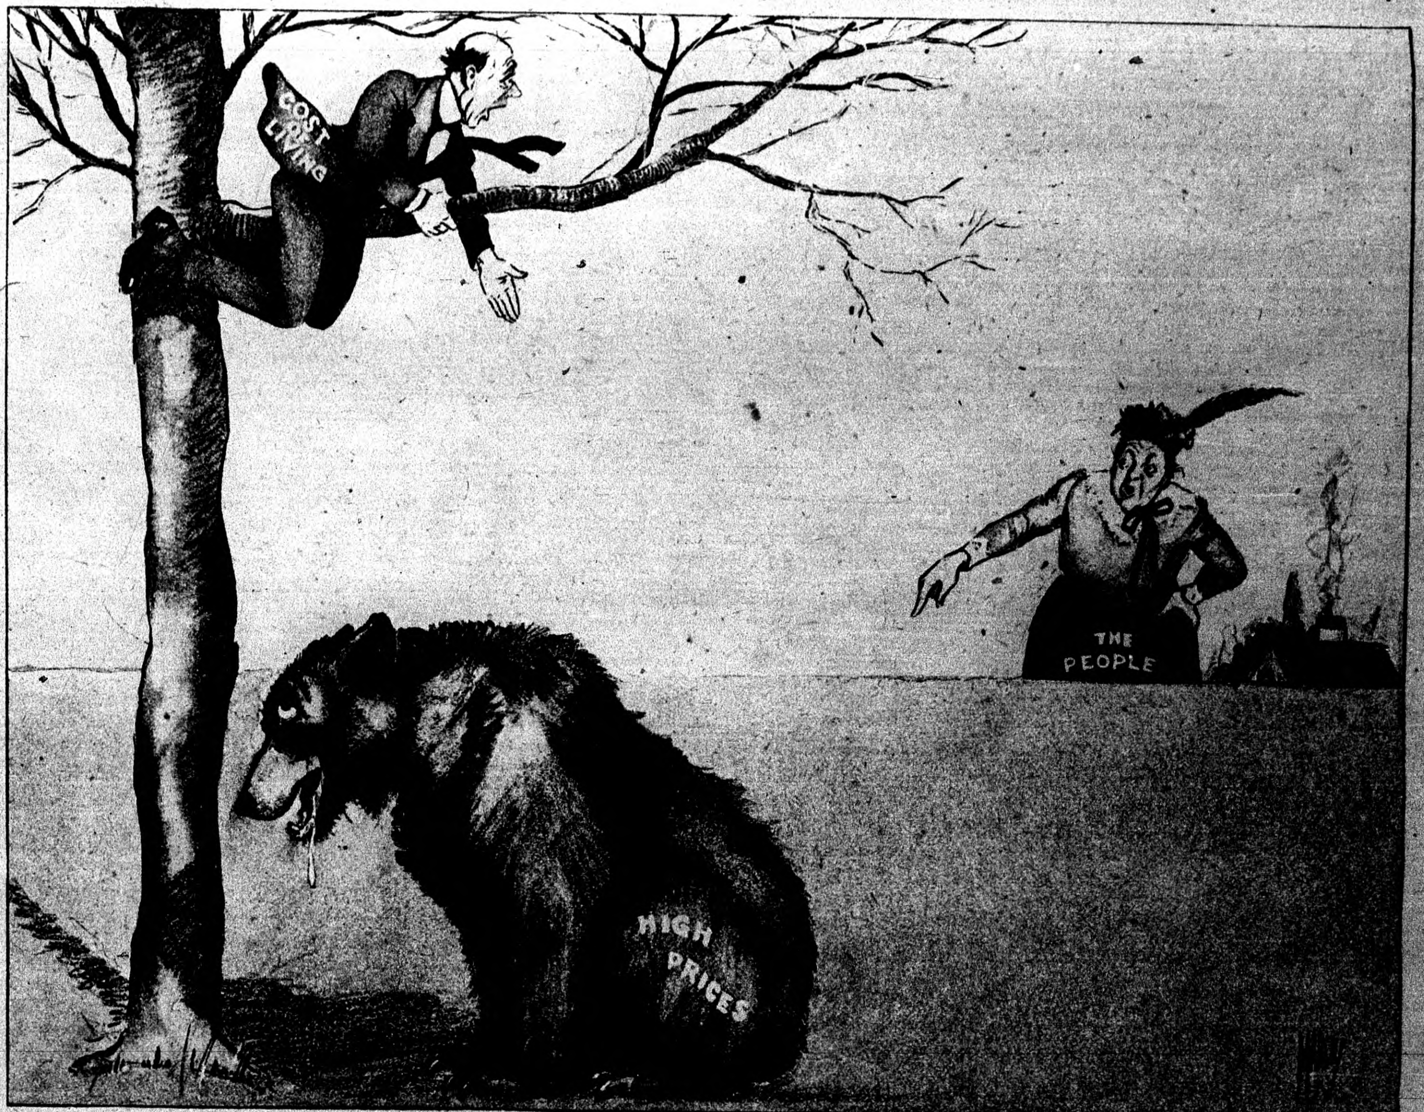
Yokohama, Shanghai, Manila, Singapore—they're all "wet," the stock is to be replenished, and—who knows?—the time may come when the parched American will be running out to the Orient for his week-ends.



"The Orient probably will be the last bit of the map to succumb to the forces of 'The Dry Mystery.'"



"The parched American will be running out to the Orient for his week-ends."



She: "Come down here this minute!"
He: "No use speaking to me---tell it to the bear."

ing, drew up a Constitution, provided for spreading branches here and there over Ireland, and called a convention of Irish Nationalists. Arthur Griffith, who for some years had been toiling up to this, and trying to educate the country up to it, formulated the Sinn Fein policy, a chief plank in which was abstention of our representatives from the English Parliament, a turning of our eyes from Westminster to Ireland, a determination to save our own national soul.

At either its second or third annual convention the National Council, now grown from six to six thousand, formally adopted the whole Sinn Fein policy of Arthur Griffith—who was the brains, and leader in, although not the President of, the National Council. By formal resolution we dropped the title of National Council and assumed that of Sinn Fein.

Our official organ, Arthur Griffith's paper, The United Irishman, soon also changed its name to Sinn Fein. The young men and women of the country, all the ardent ones, and all the thinkers, enthusiastically thronged into the movement, which, born in trouble and reared in trouble, existed and grew (unobtrusively) fat upon trouble through the succeeding years.

And that little party, hastily formed in a little cottage at Rathgar on a Sunday afternoon, about sixteen years ago, and almost absquatulated when only two days old, has now absquatulated and buried the great party which was rendered restless by the bantling impudent. Out of 1,250,000 voters in Ireland last month it got the hearty support of more than 1,000,000. It is holding the attention of the world.

I said that George Moore bowed himself out of international politics. I was wrong. Five or six individuals in a Rathgar cottage made, after all, but a miserable audience, when he might have staged an exit before the civilized and uncivilized peoples of the earth. So, in the sequel he did his best to recover what he could from the wreck of cast-away opportunity. George would now bow himself out of the Church before that much-coveted audience, a delightedly shocked and fearfully admiring world.

Ireland was treated to the royal visit. Mr. Redmond had to back out of his deal after the Rotunda sensation. The English and Scotch descendants in Ireland, as usual, turned out to the last baby-in-arms to welcome their sovereign. The Irish people indifferently went about their business. Except that, for some unknown ecclesiastical reason, to gain some supposed advantage, the great Roman Catholic Divinity College of Maynooth accepted a visit from the King. And the Bishops repaired there for the occasion.

The sensitivity of George Moore's Irish Nationalism and Roman Catholicism was so outraged by this proceeding that he felt compelled to tear himself from the bosom of his Church. Those who think themselves acquainted with George Moore's moral and religious tenets and ideals will think that I am here setting down a joke too wildly extravagant to be humorous. It is, however, a grim, sad fact, which the columns of the Dublin daily newspapers of the time will attest. As a guileless Protestant weekly of that day quaintly put it: "Mr. George Moore has renounced the errors of the Church of Rome and embraced those of our beloved Protestant Episcopalian Church."

And here was George's grand opportunity for a bit of world drama. His conversion to Protestantism then, and for the reason stated, is a matter of record. But the story of his conversion—as related by Dubliners—has never, I think, been recorded before. I am not prepared to make affidavit of the whole truth of this account. But every one in Dublin will relate it without one recital varying in the slightest detail from another. So we must premise its absolute truth. I should preface the story by saying that there is in Dublin a proselytizing society working among the very poor Catholics in the district known as the "Coombe"—on the rim of which district our friend George resided. The strongest theological argument used for inducing Coombe Catholics "to renounce the errors of Rome and embrace those of our beloved Protestant Episcopalian Church" are brought home to these poor people through the persuasive medium of heavy blankets and hot soup.

Now, when George was ready to have the curtain raised upon the great drama, he wrote a letter to the Protestant Archbishop of Dublin, requesting him to receive this penitent Christian into the Protestant Church. The good Archbishop, to whom the name of George Moore was as distinctive as John Smith, had his secretary write back a very nice letter, indeed, congratulating him on the step he was taking, giving him his blessing, and referring him to the Protestant rector of his parish. George, on receipt of this letter, lapsed into some language not quite appropriate to the rôle of neophyte. But much must be forgiven the Star when the stage carpenter bungles the curtain.

Yet he was undaunted. He sat down and wrote to the rector of his parish—who promptly replied with a beautiful letter felicitating Mr. Moore. He asked Mr. Moore to write to his curate, whose privilege it was to receive into the Church all the welcome converts.

The blessed spiritual calm which enwrapped Mr. Moore's soul during these momentous days of conversion was perturbed on receipt of this communication. But he was a marvelously persevering penitent. Setting his teeth, and his resolution, Mr. Moore wrote his request to the curate, who answered, asking Mr. Moore to present himself at the church at a certain hour on a certain day and take his place with a batch of seven other converts from his neighborhood.

"But, meantime," he wrote, "you are requested to apply at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning at the office of the Evangelization Society, where our Mr. Bobbs has been instructed to supply you with a pair of the best blankets procurable. By bringing your pot to the same office, at noon each day, you will be supplied gratis with two quarts of soup. Those who, having no pot of their own, borrow the society's pot, are, for obvious reasons, required to leave a deposit of three pence half-penny."

And when, in the face of such—shall we say untoward—circumstances, Mr. Moore's [illegible] religion still dragged him (as it did) within the new fold, what scoffer will assert that an unsaintly man is this determined character who could not be driven or dragged from the sawdust trail once he had resolved to hit it.

So Ireland had the signal honor of beginning to change her political faith coincident with Mr. Moore's bidding Vale atque Ave! to some faiths of his.

Vast Park Which Will Bear Roosevelt's Name

Wildest Scenery of Our Far Western States Is Included in the 1,600 Square Miles Bordered by Crest of Sierra Nevada Mountains

IF Theodore Roosevelt could be consulted, there is little doubt that the memorial plan most acceptable to him would be the creation of a great national park in his honor. In all the world a more powerful expression of the great outdoors, in all its contrasts, could hardly be found than the 1,600 square miles of mountain and valley scenery in California chosen to commemorate the late ex-President's name. The Big appealed to Roosevelt as to few men. With fitting symbolism the controlling note of the new park is bigness, breadth, exuberance, and force—the loftiest massing of mountains in the United States, the most rugged valleys, the most luxuriant forest, the biggest trees.

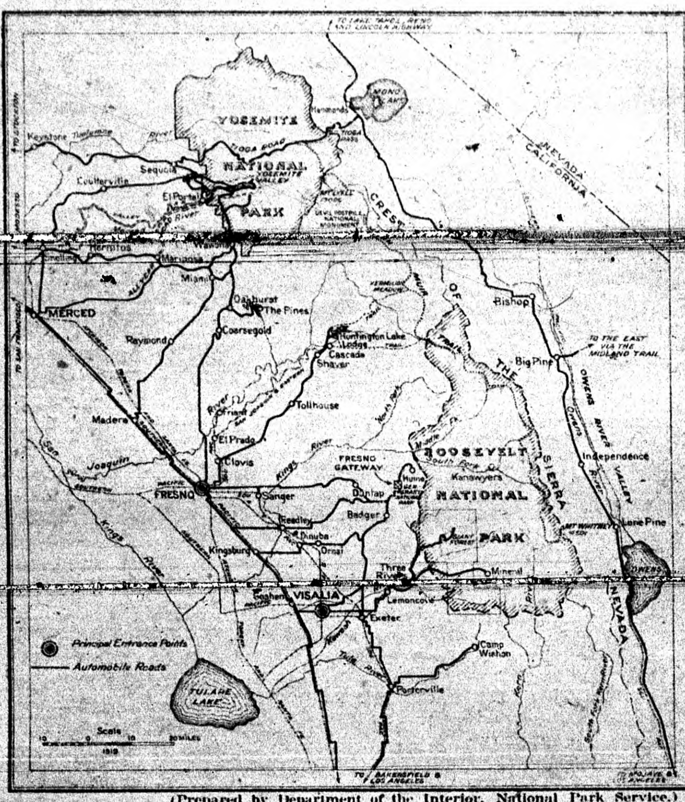
The plan has received spontaneous support. The suggestion itself was spontaneous—made in this city, under circumstances well worth telling. Roosevelt was a member of the Boone-Crocker Club and had been urged to be present at its annual dinner at the Metropolitan Club in January. He said he doubted if he could, but that he would be there in spirit. In the interim he died. At the meeting Stephen K. Mather, Director of the National Park Service, made a speech on the establishment of the Greater Sequoia Park in California. Afterward, the dinner turned into a memorial meeting to Colonel Roosevelt. As the tributes were being paid an idea came to Captain Frank Lyman, a member of the club.

"Why not name the new park the Roosevelt, instead of the Greater Sequoia?" he said, and there was instant approval.

The bill creating the Roosevelt National Park has already passed the Senate and is now before the House for early action. Such is the magic of Roosevelt's name. For four years and more the Department of the Interior had been at work on a plan to enlarge the present Sequoia National Park from an area of 252 square miles to 1,600 square miles, but until the ex-President's name was attached the momentum of public interest and support which the project deserved was lacking.

For its eastern boundary the Roosevelt National Park will have 75 miles of the crest of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. From its extreme north to Mount Whitney, near its southern boundary, the region is a magnificent mountain climax—a collection of peaks ranging from 13,000 feet to Mount Whitney's 14,501 feet of altitude—the highest in the United States proper. [Mount McKinley, in Alaska, is the loftiest North American peak.] This area is connected by ridges and gigantic mountain masses scarcely less in height. For ten or fifteen miles east of the crest, peaks, ranges, and circled ridges are massed in a tremendous glaciered and snow-sprinkled area known to mountain climbers as High Sierra. It is the most celebrated high mountain region of America. Its devotees have long compared it with the Swiss Alps.

West again from the zone of the High Sierra the range subsides slowly. This great area of lesser altitude is crossed by innumerable ranges and divides, between which flow rushing rivers buried in deep forested canyons which are among the noblest in the United States. Some of the heights exceed 11,000 feet. The precipices immediately inclosing the valleys range from three to five thousand feet above the floor level. The zone will become, when trails are developed, the most wonderful playground for the trail traveler and the camper-out. In the far southwestern corner lies the present Sequoia National Park with its supreme forests.



(Prepared by Department of the Interior, National Park Service.)

Map Showing the Proposed Roosevelt National Park in Relation to the Yosemite National Park.

Out of the high glaciered shoulders of the crest of the Sierra flow countless streams, outlets of their snowfields. These combine into three greater river systems, which find their origin within the park. The river of the south is the Kern. For thirty miles it lies in a precipice-bordered valley, with mountains from twelve to fourteen thousand feet in height rising upon either side.

The Kaweah River, with its four forks, drains the Giant Forest of the present Sequoia Park, its waters bordered by more than a million trunks of Sequoia Washingtoniana. In this forest grows the biggest and oldest living thing in the world, the General Sherman Tree, the diameter of whose trunk is thirty-six and a half feet. The Sequoia trees have dark, purplish red trunks, thick and tall. They are the kings of the American forest.

The greatest river originating in the park is the Kings River, each of its two forks passing through a canyon which, when it becomes known, is destined to a fame second only to that of the Yosemite Valley. The south fork passes through the Kings River Canyon—a valley similar to the Yosemite in breadth and general dimensions. It needs no prophet to foresee in this canyon the Summer home of thousands of campers-out, as soon as it becomes accessible by development.

The middle fork of the Kings River passes through the Tehipite Valley, which is far the superior of Yosemite in bigness, wildness, and exuberance, although it has little of Yosemite's exquisite quality of beauty. Its walls are quite as lofty and are turreted and varied with towering peaks. Tehipite Dome protects its western end very much as El Capitan guards the western end of Yosemite Valley. It is an enormous granite finger 3,000 feet in height from the valley floor, which is higher than El Capitan. Mount Harrington towers still a thousand feet higher. The river is as tempestuous as the valley. For miles it is little more than a succession of tremendous rushing waterfalls. It is the home of innumerable cutthroat trout.

The entire region has long been recognized as the greatest place in America for the traveler by trail and the camper-out. Its loftiest snow-crowned heights are easily penetrable by trail, and its middle zones and giant valleys will especially become the resort of the campers. This part of the country receives no rain from the middle of June until the middle of October. Very few parties take tents into the wilderness. It is enough to load warm sleeping bags and plenty of clothing upon mule-back and, at night, slipping into these, sleep around campfires in the shelter of great pines.

It will be the policy of the National Park Service to preserve this character for the Roosevelt National Park. Let it remain the resort of the real lovers of nature! Government activities, then, will largely be devoted to developing the trails so that travel afoot and on horseback shall be easy into the very heart of the highest wilderness. Motor roads will enter the park from the highways and the railroads of California's central valley, and at their terminals in the Giant Forest and elsewhere parties will be outfitted for the enjoyment of the greater wilderness.

Mount Whitney, at the climax of the great range, is flanked on the south by Mount Langley, 14,042 feet, and on the north by Mount Tyndall, 14,025 feet, and Mount Williamson, 14,384 feet. One looks out from its summit upon a vast stormy sea of whitened peaks, among which Mount Brewer, 13,577 feet; Thunder Mountain, 13,578 feet, and the Kaweah Peaks, 13,728 feet, are merely higher elevations among hundreds of others.

From the northern end of the Roosevelt National Park to the summit of Mount Whitney and close to the crest of the Sierra already passes the John Muir Trail, California's memorial to her famous prophet of the out-of-doors. The beginning of this trail is the Yosemite Valley. With the development of the Roosevelt National Park many trails will lead up to the great heights and join it.

American City in France

The article printed in part below was written for La Petite Gironde, one of the principal newspapers of Bordeaux, France, which has had the enterprise to issue an American edition in view of the tremendous influx of American troops into Bordeaux since we entered the war.

WHEN the Government of the United States declared war against Germany it immediately got busy securing ports in France for the disembarkation of troops and the storing of food supplies and other materials.

The intensification of maritime traffic in the French ports had caused, in some places, an extraordinary congestion and the existing facilities would not permit of the quick unloading of ships. The extension of the port of Bassens, near Bordeaux, during the war, to remedy this congestion, is one of the most characteristic examples of the rapidity of which the Americans are capable.

In justice it must be remarked that, in 1915, under the capable and energetic direction of M. Clavel, Inspector General of Bridges and Highways, three wharves had been built at Bassens. The Paris-Orleans Railway Company had laid several tracks connecting these wharves with the principal lines to Paris. This undertaking was not without difficulties. Important engineering work had to be done, such as the construction of a "saut de mouton," a sort of tunnel under the main line for the passage of the junction track, thereby avoiding the danger and increased work connected with too great a number of branch lines.

The Americans immediately decided to utilize the newly erected docks and to construct additional ones. Construction was begun in November, 1917. The 18th Regiment of Engineers, under the command of Colonel J. B. Cavanaugh, composed of about 3,000 men from Washington, Oregon, and California, was stationed at Bassens, in wooden barracks which had been erected in a very short time.

They had at their disposal modern machinery rendering it possible to do a large amount of work each day. While one man can hardly load more than one cubic yard of earth per day, steam shovels can load 3,000 cubic yards in the same time. With the use of these steam shovels, several mounds disappeared in a few days. Also, in the space of three or four days, huge electric cranes were unloading 1,000 tons of merchandise per dock each day.

In all, seventeen new docks were built, of which seven were added to the three constructed by the French in that part of Bassens which the Americans call "Old Bassens." The remaining ten, each 825 feet in length, were erected in the "New Bassens" section.

A few minutes spent on the Bordeaux-Bassens road, with its constant traffic of trucks, automobiles, and side cars, will suffice to convince any one of the feverish yet well-organized activity which reigns over the whole region.

In short, a veritable new city has been created at Bassens since the war—already a prospering city, whose future prosperity is assured by the solid relations which have been established between France and the United States of America. BRIGGS DAVENPORT.

How Seven Evenings' Study Brought Success and Paved the Way to a $10,000 Position

By F. H. DRUMMOND

A Gripping Success Story That Will Make All Ambitious Men and Women Ask Themselves the Question: "Why Can't I Do the Same?"

I will never forget the words of Charles M. Schwab, the biggest steel manufacturer in the world, who began life as a poor boy at a dollar a day. He said: "Nothing is so plentiful in America as opportunity. There are more jobs for forceful people than there are forceful people to fill them. . . . Captains of industry are not hunting money. America is heavy with it. They are seeking brains—specialized brains—and faithful, loyal service. No one has a corner on success. It is always up at auction; the one who pays the most for it, gets it. Whatever you resolve to be you can be." Emerson tells us that our most important asset is not what we are, but what we are capable of being.

But to go on with my story. I was 18 years of age, living in Farmington, Ill., which at that time was a town of 1,800 inhabitants. I had no trade, no special training for anything, no idea of what I wanted to be in life—except that I wanted to be a success. I took stock of my surroundings. Here I was, in a town of limited opportunity. I had the choice of working in the mines, the mill, one of the general stores, or possibly the bank, as a life prospect. Frankly, it didn't appeal to me. I shrank at the thought of living a life that so many people go through in small towns. They get a half-way decent living wage and are content with it. Thousands of them die, never to know the great possibilities they had locked up in themselves.

Preparation the First Step

I deplored the fact that I had no capital to start in a business somewhere, not realizing that money is not the only real capital a man should have. I was not alive to the fact that a trained brain and conscience are the true success capital.

And so I asked myself what I could do to prepare myself for a successful business career. Shorthand appealed to me as being the logical study to embrace. This was impressed upon my mind from what I had seen others accomplish through it. Three of our former townsfolk—men who are today large figures in business in Detroit and Chicago—struck out for themselves in their youth, after learning shorthand. They used their knowledge of this art as a stepping stone to a brilliant success in business.

An Instrument for Advancement

As I reasoned it, shorthand would, first of all, assure me of a living wage, no matter if I made further progress through it or not. On the other hand, I could use it for business, no matter how far up the ladder I might go. It would be invaluable in taking down word-for-word conversations over the telephone; jotting down notes of meetings I might be called into; making quick memoranda of the hundred-and-one details that come up daily in business. In short, it would make me a more accurate and a more efficient business man.

As one of them explain[illegible] me, you can be a clerk or bookkeeper all [illegible] life and never get anywhere to speak of. With a shorthand writer it is different. You come in direct personal contact with the executives of the business—the men who are conducting it. From them you take dictation of the innermost things in that business and gradually absorb everything in connection with it. In this way you fit yourself to take on more and more responsibility, relieving the heads of the business of details with which you are perfectly familiar. Naturally, you become more and more valuable as your capacity to take responsibility grows greater, and in this way work yourself up in the business.

I asked the advice of a number of older acquaintances whom I knew were shorthand writers, and was encouraged by them to take up its study. The principal drawback seemed to be th[illegible] it was necessary to devote to the study in order to become master of its intricacies, and a proficient writer. It seemed, however, that this was a necessary evil, and although somewhat discouraged at the prospect, I decided to enroll in the local business college.

A Step in the Right Direction

While waiting for the new term to open, I chanced upon an advertisement of a shorthand which claimed as its principal merit, simplicity—no shading or position, a limited number of characters and rules to learn—yet absolute adequateness for any purpose for which shorthand could be used. This shorthand had been so arranged in lessons as to make it possible to learn it at home in a comparatively short time—and, as it was clearly stated in the advertisement that if I was not satisfied with the Course I could return it without charge to myself, I sent for it.

This was my first step in the right direction. I studied it diligently and within a week had learned all of the characters by heart, and after practicing for a month, felt so thoroughly the master of my newly gained knowledge, that I decided to go to Chicago and seek a position immediately.

I felt that placing myself on my own resources in a large city would broaden me and make me a bigger man in every sense. It would call out the biggest things in me—make me rely upon myself and not lean upon friends and acquaintances for assistance and encouragement in business.

On the High Road to Success

I secured a position as stenographer in a publishing house. Six months later I was made head stenographer at $30 per week. This brought me in frequent contact with the General Manager, who delegated more and more responsibility to me as time wore on.

In a little over a year I was made Office Manager. That was just seven years ago. Today I am Vice President and General Manager, with a small but growing interest in the business. My salary, with my bonus, netted me slightly in excess of $10,000 for 1918. In all these years of work in the various departments of the business, of which I am now the directing head, I found my knowledge of shorthand to be invaluable and I use it today in many time-saving short-cuts.

What My Sister Did

It may be of interest to mention here the splendid progress which a younger sister of mine made by learning the same Course which I took. She was a saleswoman in one of the local stores at the time, and studied evenings. In three months she secured a position as stenographer in a large plow factory in Galesburg, Ill. Today she is the secretary to the Vice-President of the Company at a salary of $125 per month.

And now, as I look back to those days in Farmington when Father proposed that I take a job as weigher in the mines, I think of the black prospects I had at that time. And I thank my stars that I had the courage of my convictions to prepare myself for something bigger and better—and Paragon Shorthand was the means of aiding me.

The story that Mr. Drummond recounts is the story of many of America's greatest business men. If you have read the stories of the lives of the principal figures in business in this country today, you will have noted that almost invariably their start to fame and fortune was through their ability to write Shorthand. Take such men as Charles M. Schwab, Theodore Roosevelt, Frank A. Vanderlip, George B. Cortelyou, William Loeb, Jr., Edward Bok and others too numerous to mention, and you will find that Shorthand aided them in their marvelous careers.

Whether you are on the bottom or the top rung of the ladder, you will find Shorthand a wonderful help to you in your climb to success. It will unlock the door to Opportunity more quickly than any other study you might undertake. It will prepare you for rapid advancement and groom you for the bigger job that is waiting for you.

Easy to Learn

The Paragon System is inexpensive and Easy to Learn. You can learn the word signs in a few evenings. It is an easily mastered system and totally different from the ponderously technical, involved and intricate old-time systems that require many months of study before they can be put to practical use.

Here, for instance, is a letter that is typical of the experience of thousands of Paragon Shorthand writers:

> "Enclosed please find my check for $5 for the Paragon Shorthand Course. I don't see how you can afford to sell it at such a low figure. I thought it was next to impossible (until I tried it) to believe that any system could be so concise, short, simple, easy to learn and remember and still authentic. I compared the knowledge I have attained after but ten evenings' study with that of a student of a commercial school who has been giving his undivided time to it for three months, and, candidly, I can write and read much more than he can. The difference in time, expense and the amount to learn is all in favor of Paragon.

PARIS AGAIN IN LAUGHING MOOD

Leonard Merrick's Delicious Romance of the Poet Tricotrin—Latest Fiction by Frank Swinnerton, Conan Doyle, Temple Thurston, and Others

WHILE PARIS LAUGHED. By Leonard Merrick. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.75 net.

FOR those who have already met Gustave Tricotrin, and having met count him among the best-beloved of their literary friends, "While Paris Laughed" will need no recommendation beyond its sub-title. All readers, however, have not had the great good fortune of encountering Tricotrin and his friend Nicolas Pitou, the out-at-elbows poet and the unsuccessful composer who lived and loved and laughed and hungered in the garrets of Montmartre during the happy time before the war. They knew, these two, most of the garrets of this part of Paris, for habitual impecuniosity does not tend toward undue promptness in the paying of rent, and landlords are usually Philistines possessed of a craving for cash; wherefore Tricotrin and his friend were obliged to change their domicile with considerable frequency. But let no one suppose that such contretemps had any lasting effect upon the spirits either of the poet or of the Futurist composer. Were they not both young and romantic and hopeful and possessed of an unfaltering belief in their own and in each other's talents? Theirs was a world of love and adventure and boundless possibilities; and if there was often a good deal of uncertainty regarding such sordid questions as where their next meal was coming from—or whether it was coming at all!—the fact only served to make life more intensely interesting.

He had a temperament, of course, had this lovable Tricotrin who was the despair of his worthy and ultra-respectable relations and as Mr. Merrick has elsewhere reminded us, "temperaments play queer tricks." Tricotrin could not, for instance, refrain from acting up to any situation that appealed to his literary instinct, and there were times when this little weakness of his got him into trouble, though on one occasion at least—that one which is recorded in "A Piece of Sugar"—it enabled him to turn the tables on an ungenerous acquaintance in an entirely effective and satisfactory manner. But when he tried to be politic and practical—and he did make one determined effort to be both, as witness "The Poet Grows Practical"—the failing proved much in his way, and had he been a less mercurial person the results might have distressed him. [illegible] however though it is true that he had passing fits of despair which he thoroughly enjoyed such as that one in which we discover him plunged when he appears at the little café, the scene of that sparkling, ironic, and wholly delightful tale which opens the volume. Such moments were inevitable, for Tricotrin found editors grievously unappreciative and undiscerning persons; besides, he was usually in love, with but few "arid intervals of unattachment," such as he looked regretfully back upon while "Waiting for Henriette." And waiting being wearisome, he occupied the time in a manner whose results presently caused his emotions and his sense of dramatic values to clash in a most unexpected manner.

But then most of the many things that [illegible] expected, for Mr. Merrick is as thoroughly master of the surprise and the quite unlooked for twist at the end as he is of laughter and of tears. This present volume, it is true, is one compact of gayety and wit and mirth, its irony, though keen, is the irony that provokes to delighted chuckles, and if here and there a tear does shine for an instant it twinkles through laughter—as for instance, in that tale which is certainly one of the best and perhaps the best of the dozen which make up the volume, "The Woman in the Book." The deft and delicate satire, the portrayal of ludicrous and entirely human vanity, the brilliant characterization, the irony and the touch of pathos which lifts its conclusion to the realm of poetry, make of this story a veritable little masterpiece.

Lightly and swiftly as they are sketched, we know all the people in it, from Toine the celebrity herself, to the three provincial shopkeepers who had known her in the days of her undistinguished youth, and the poet who wrote the autobiography with the beautiful sentiments—our Tricotrin. More than any other quality, perhaps, more even than the wit and the irony, the sparkle which is as gay and as French as champagne, the exquisite style and unfailing deftness of plot, it is this extraordinary ability for making even the least important among his characters real human beings, that renders Mr. Merrick's short stories so very exceptional. Whether it is such a playwright as de Varangeville, or a boarding-house keeper like Madame Grospiron, or the provincial editor, Monsieur Blotto, whose desire to meet celebrities drove Tricotrin and the ever-faithful Pitou to the verge of despair, as is related in "Monsieur Blotto and the Lions," each is a genuine person, swiftly and often brilliantly characterized. And dominating them all stands Tricotrin himself, suffering and loving and despairing and hoping but always on tiptoe, always a-tingle with the zest of life.

More thoroughly than almost any other character in all the wide range of fiction Tricotrin is incarnate Youth—Youth with its generosity and its impulsiveness, its innocent affectations, its ardent championships, its indomitable hopefulness, its te[illegible]

THEFTS AND BORROWINGS IN LANGUAGE

Dr. Swann's Interesting Studies Showing Instances in Which Additions Are Made to Our Common Speech

By BRANDER MATTHEWS

FRENCH TERMINOLOGIES IN THE MAKING. Studies in Conscious Contributions to the Vocabulary. By Harvey J. Swann, Ph. D. New York: Columbia University Press. 1918. Pp. 250.

MOST of the doctorate dissertations which are now being issued with increasing frequency by our rapidly multiplying university presses cannot be called readable; and they are not designed for the delight of the general reader. They are certified as "contributions to knowledge worthy of publication"; but the knowledge they contribute is of use, more often than not, only to the few who are specialists in the subject to which the learned monograph is devoted, and who are glad to get the results of its author's minute investigation. In fact, it would not be unfair to suggest that these solidly documented inquiries, in which every fact is supported by chapter and verse, are not intended to be read. They are to be consulted and sometimes they are to be studied.

Now and again, however, an aspirant for the doctorate happens to take a theme less remote from the ordinary interests of life; and when he does make this happy choice, the result may be readable. This is the case with the dissertation by Dr. Swann which has just been published by the Columbia University Press. His book is pleasantly written; it is full of interesting facts, never before brought together; and it is sustained by a firm grasp on the laws which govern the evolution of human speech. It is true that his volume is published in the series of Columbia University's Studies in Romance, Philology, and Literature, and that in it he is examining the evolution of certain special vocabularies in French; but the same method could be applied profitably to the corresponding vocabularies in English.

> How does a modern language renew its vocabulary, and by what process? What faculty has it for expressing new [illegible]

In other words, how does a language enlarge its vocabulary and how does it devise the technical terms necessary whenever a new art is developed and whenever science makes a sudden advance into unexplored territory? Who is the creator of the host of novel vocables made necessary by the swift acceptance of the automobile, for example, and of the airplane?—of bacteriology and of experimental psychology? Dr. Swann quotes from Archbishop Trench the suggestive remark that > one of the most striking facts about new words, and a very signal testimony of their birth from the bosom of the people, is the difficulty which is often found in tracing their pedigree. * * * Their rise is mysterious; like so many acts of becoming, it is veiled in deepest obscurity. They appear; they are in everybody's mouth; but yet when it is inquired from whence they are, nobody can tell.

Upon this Dr. Swann comments that language does not always function in obscurity. On the contrary, in fact, terminologies are chosen at times with the most conspicuous self-consciousness. When some new object, like the automobile or the airplane, is at length brought to a state of perfection that takes it out of the realm of experiment and so forces it upon the attention of the community that the general discussion of it becomes a necessity, then a whole congeries of new words must be found or created for the purpose.

We all know that when it became practical to propel vehicles along our roadways by steam or by a gasoline motor, we began by styling the carriage so propelled "a horseless vehicle." But when this horseless vehicle came into general use this name was felt to be too cumbersome and we substituted for it the more adequate "automobile." Even this quadrisyllable was found to be too long, and we are inclined to speak of a "car" or a "motor" more often than we do of an "automobile." The French themselves generally cut "automobile" down to "auto," just as they have cut down "cinématographe" to "cinéma" and just as we have cut down "taximeter cab" to "taxi" and "moving picture" to "movie," just as our ancestors of the eighteenth century cut down "mobile vulgus" to "mob" and "cabriolet" to "cab." There is always at work an [illegible] force which tends to take verbal short cuts. Only a generation ago "photo" for "photograph" was denounced as a vulgarism, employed only by the illiterate; but it can be found in the pages of more than one book by an author of high repute—notably, in the "Kim" of Rudyard Kipling, a writer who is scrupulously precise in his parts of speech. And while "photograph" has had its tail cut off "telephone" is in process of losing its head, being reduced to "phone."

Holding the belief that it is possible to discover the origins of certain vocabularies, Dr. Swann has chosen to deal with three groups, the terminology of the railroad, of the automobile, and of the airplane, as these have been developed in France. He points out that the [illegible] into France almost twenty years after it had been first successfully operated in England; and that as a result of this taking over of a British invention, the railroad vocabulary of French availed itself of a score of English words, not earlier known on the Continent. Among these borrowed terms are "rail," "wagon," "locomotive," "train," "tender," "ballast," and "tunnel"—this last being a word which English had originally borrowed from French. And when the French took these technicalities from the English they were only following the example of the English, who had derived many of their seafaring terms from the Scand[illegible] and the Dutch, and most [illegible] military terms—"Captain," "Major," "Colonel," "General,"—from the French, who were the most warlike people in Europe from the rise of Louis XIV. to the fall of Napoleon.

Whenever there is a new public utility there arises an immediate need of new laws for its regulation; and among the English-speaking peoples this new law is always an extension of an old law modified to suit the novel conditions. Thus the law of the railroads was a development from the law of the stagecoach; and the railroads were held to be bound by the customary obligations of "common carriers." And language follows the example of law; it tries to adjust the technical terms of an old invention to the necessities of a new invention. Dr. Swann has made the interesting discovery that in making technical terms for their new railroads the French drew upon the special vocabulary of their canals, which had preceded the iron roads as the chief means of transportation in France. For example, the word "gare," meaning a station, is derived from the vocabulary of the canalboat men.

And now occasion serves to point out that the terminology of the railroad was influenced in a like fashion in Great Britain and in the United States by the terminology of the means of transport which preceded the harnessing of the iron horse. In France, as we have seen, this predecessor was the canal, in Great Britain it was the stagecoach, and in the United States it was the river steamer. The British transferred many of the terms of the old coaching days to the railway; they call the conductor a "guard"; they call the cars "carriages"; they call the locomotive engineer the "engine driver," and they call a freight car a "goods van." The Americans, unfamiliar with the elaborate stagecoach system of the right little tight little island, and accustomed to travel on our commodious river steamers, applied to the railroad words well known to us in connection with inland navigation. We designated the man who drove the engine as an "engineer"; we did not hesitate to "ship" goods that were going overland; we spoke of a "freight car"—the word "freight" being taken over from marine usage; and to this day the conductor cries out "All aboard!"

One railroad word of American manufacture has never had an equivalent in the railroad terminology of either England [illegible] have, since it describes a device nonexistent in Europe because it is there unnecessary. This is "cow-catcher." In the more densely populated parts of England and France where the railroad was first laid down it was immediately imperative to fence off the "right of way," as we call it, and to prevent the stray intruder, either man or beast, from [illegible] his life on the path of the locomotive. But here in the sparsely settled United States, where the railroad was often thrust out far in advance of the population, across the empty prairies and into the trackless wilderness, there was at first no need of protecting trespassers from the possibly fatal results of their own folly. What was needful to do was to protect the [illegible] crew and the passengers from the dangerous consequences of collision with a foreign body. The resulting projection in front of the locomotive was dency to walk into mud-puddles while gazing at the stars. But Tricotrin is not only Youth; he is also the born artist, with all the vagaries and swift appreciations and excellent intentions of the type so many have tried to draw—and tried in vain. He falls in and out of love with the utmost facility, but he is never consciously insincere, and his affection for his friend Pitou does not waver for a moment. Between them it is indeed "one heart and one purse," though the purse is often empty. If we laugh at them both, and we frequently do laugh at as well as with them, our mirth is always tempered with tenderness. There are of course dull and stupid people who will see only their absurdities, and be blind alike to their intense humanness and to that spark of divine fire which glows within them both. But those who have eyes to see and hearts to feel will regard it as a day to be marked with a white stone, that one on which they first encountered the impecunious poet who lived in the garrets of Montmartre "While Paris Laughed."

SHOPS AND HOUSES

SHOPS AND HOUSES. By Frank Swinnerton. George H. Doran Company. $1.50 net.

THE scene of Mr. Swinnerton's new story is laid in an English suburban town not far from London, which he calls Beckwith. It is one of those little places, like hundreds of others in America as well as in England, where the principal occupation of everybody is giving strict attention to their neighbors' affairs. Many of the men are in business in London; their wives employ themselves with housekeeping and small entertainments, and the endeavor to marry off their daughters. This last is a very serious matter indeed, for the girls far outnumber the men, and for those whose unhappy fate it is to be, so to speak, left over, there is nothing to look forward to save idle, discontented, gossiping spinsterhood. Life in Beckwith, moreover, is one long struggle for social consideration, and "the wrong thing said or done flies like ill-tidings from lip to lip, from eye to eye, very secretly, very finally." Such is Beckwith at the time of which Mr. Swinnerton writes, which is the now seeming-distant period before the war.

To this tattling, self-centred, ill-natured little town there presently comes great excitement. The leading family in Beckwith, and the only one occupying an assured social position, was the Vechantors—father, mother, and the son Louis, who is the principal character in the book. But it so happened that Mr. Vechantor's grandfather, the founder of the family fortune, had had a younger brother who was a kind of black sheep and had entirely vanished from the social horizon. The present Vechantors did not even know whether he had or had not left any descendants—until they suddenly learned that Peel the grocer was to retire, and that his business had been sold to a William Vechantor. The peculiarity of the name made doubt impossible; the new grocer was undeniably a relative of one of the first families of Beckwith!

It is with the complications produced by the arrival in Beckwith of the excellent William Vechantor, his wife, his young son Reg, and his pretty 20-year-old daughter Dorothy that the plot of the novel is chiefly concerned. Even before he has so much as seen them, Louis has taken up arms in their defense, being, as he has suddenly discovered, altogether disgusted with Beckwith and its ways. But all the snobbishness of the little town is involved in the conflict, and matters are made no easier by the fact that Dorothy, the grocer's daughter, is a very pretty, intelligent, high-spirited, and decidedly unusual girl, with a mind of her own—a terrible thing in Beckwith. She makes many enemies, among them Miss Lampe, most active and most venomous of all the Beckwith gossips, who lived in a little house near the railway station, and allowed nothing to escape her, her motto being, in Louis's opinion, "Watch and pry."

Apart from the two families of Vechantors, the only decent and kindly person in all the town is Mrs. Toppett, the wife of the vicar, a woman given to occasional lapses into indiscreet frankness, who once actually goes so far as to admit that in Beckwith she feels "as though I'd been buried alive." All the others are drawn with a pen dipped in acid, most of them very well drawn, indeed. Especially good is the picture of the three Hughes sisters, Adela, Judith, and Veronica, their outward accord, their jealousies, spitefulness, and hatred. Adela, whose pose it was never to say an unkind thing of any one, is very real, and so in the beginning is the more important Veronica, a feline type, portrayed with deftness and an unusual amount of subtlety. But her character is not very well sustained, and the crudeness and crass stupidity she presently shows are entirely out of keeping with the ultra-sophistication accredited to her. It is necessary for the development of the plot that Louis should gain some insight into her character, but one feels that the revelation [illegible]. He himself is excellently portrayed, and though the incident of his temporary disappearance seems rather strained, he is always very much alive, and admirably analyzed—his good breeding, his generosity, his intelligence, and that weakness which results from the fact that he is "governed entirely by his impulses."

Dorothy, despite the fact that her rudeness to Louis is rather overemphasized, is, on the whole, a very charming and very human heroine, the reader's liking for whom increases as her story and her character develop. Her love for Louis and her feelings the morning after the memorable scene at the concert are very deftly and delicately analyzed. Mr. Swinnerton knows a good deal about human nature, and he sets forth his knowledge with many admirable and illuminating little touches.

But though Louis and Dorothy, rebels both against the established order of things as represented by Beckwith, are the leading characters in the story, the centre of the book is Beckwith itself. Very clever indeed is the account of the little town and its inhabitants, with which the greater part of the first chapter is taken up. Those who live in Beckwith have "very little wider life," and, therefore, the position they occupy in their neighbors' opinion becomes a matter of very great importance, as is so well illustrated on the occasion of the little party at the Hugheses'. It was then that Louis had his one moment of clairvoyance, the moment during which he looked at the other guests and "had a horror of them," while their laughter seemed to him "like the grinning of skulls." How his horror presently develops is an important part of the story. Contrasted with all this is the charming sketch of Apple House, presided over by that lovely and gracious gentlewoman, Mrs. Vechantor. The book is, of course, admirably written, and, though not another "Nocturne," it is well worth reading.

DANGER!

DANGER! AND OTHER STORIES. By A. Conan Doyle. George H. Doran Company.

THE longest and most noteworthy of the ten tales which make up this book is the one which gives its name to the collection, "Danger!" And the most notable thing about "Danger!" is the fact that it was written about a year and a half before the outbreak of the great war. Read now, it seems very familiar, so closely do the events related in it resemble those which have actually transpired during the last four years; but when one recollects that no one of these had happened at the date when it was written, it becomes a very remarkable bit of prophecy. For "Danger!" is the story of how a foreign power tried to starve England into submission by sinking the ships that brought her food—and succeeded. What the mythical Captain John Sirius is described as accomplishing is in truth almost startlingly like what the real Emperor William II. of Germany tried his best to do, and hoped to do, and failed to achieve. As Conan Doyle himself says in the "Preface" to this volume, he did not, while writing the story which he hoped might warn his countrymen of their danger, foresee the rapidity and efficiency with which the British Navy would meet and foil the menace of the submarine; but he did foresee the extent of that menace, and sketched it with a quite extraordinary amount of accuracy. Captain John Sirius sinks merchant vessels, though with some regard to the safety of their passengers, and with his little fleet of no more than eight submarines defies the might of England.

Of the other stories in the book "The Horror of the Heights" is very much the best. Grip and thrill and a real imaginative power are to be found in this tale of the aviator who ascended to heights as yet unscaled by any still living man, and found there that which fully justifies the title of the story. Then, as others had perished, and as he had divined that they had perished, so, too, did he. "Three of Them" is a charming little sketch of some wholly delightful children, their talk, their games, and their very likable "daddy." "The

Another volume of Mr. Galsworthy's charming and characteristic essays and studies. It has a particularly timely interest in that it is so largely concerned with questions, material and artistic, of reconstruction; and it has a more special interest for Americans in many of its studies, which deal with American standards, intellectual and practical. Among the titles are: "American and Briton," "The Drama in England and America," "Impressions of France," "Balance Sheet of the Soldier-Workman," "The Road," etc. $1.50 net

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

J. B. T.—Can you tell me the name of the author of the lines given below and where I may find the complete poem from which they are quoted?

When the box of Pandora was opened on earth,
With the list of what Fate for each mortal intends,
At the long string of ills the kind goddess relented,
And slipped in three blessings—wife, children, and friends.

The poem from which the lines are incorrectly quoted is evidently William Robert Spencer's "Wife, Children, and Friends." This poem begins thus:

When the black lettered list to the gods was presented,
(The list of what Fate for each mortal [illegible]
At the long strings of ills a kind goddess relented,
And slipped in three blessings—wife, children, and friends.

The poem, of which there are three more stanzas, is printed in full in Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song, in Volume I. of the World's Best Poetry, and in other collections of verse.

"Song of the Camp"

E. ELLSWORTH.—Will you kindly tell the name and quote the balance of the poem beginning as follows:

"Give us a song," the soldier cried,
His outward trenches guarding;
When the heated guns of camp allied,
Grew weary of bombarding.

The lines quoted above are the opening lines of "The Song of the Camp," written by Bayard Taylor, founded on an incident of the Crimean war. It is too long for our space and may be found in Stedman's American Anthology, Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song, and many other collections of verse.

Fence of Trust

H. A. B.—Will you kindly print the poem beginning:

Build a little fence of trust about today—

and tell me the author?

The author of the poem asked for is Mary Frances Butts and the lines are:

Build a little fence of trust about today,
Fill the space with loving work and therein stay.
Look not through the sheltering bars upon tomorrow,
God can help thee bear what comes of joy or sorrow.

Life of Nelson

M. V. B.—Will you please give an approximate valuation of Southey's "Life of Nelson," in two volumes, published by Eastburn, Kirk & Co., Boston, in 1813?

Also the Union Magazine, edited by Mrs. C. M. Kirkland, Volume II., printed by H. Luding & Co., 70 Vesey Street, in 1848?

"The Life of Nelson," Boston, 1813, is not of special value. The Union Magazine for 1848 has sold at auction for $13.

Charlotte Temple

SARA C. SPENCER.—Will you kindly tell me where I can get a copy of "The Romance of Charlotte Temple"?

The romantic story of the young woman Charlotte Temple by Susanna Haswell Rowson, with an introduction by Francis W. Halsey, was published in 1905 by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, 354 Fourth Avenue, New York, from which firm a copy can doubtless be obtained.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

P. B. ALLEVA.—Referring to the query of "H. A. B." as to name of poem cited, will say that in my book of copied selections it is entitled "What Might Have Been." No author's name is given, but the next following poem is by Celia Thaxter.

I'm getting used to pain—
(We do, you know, after awhile)—
And I've learned to bathe my wounds
In the soft ointment of a smile.
But if the time should ever come
When you would care to see my face,
Or deign within my loving arms
Your old familiar, oft-sought place—
You need not fear to meet a frown,
Or find my tender words untrue,
For you'll be welcome, for the sake
Of what has passed between us two.
And now farewell, dearly beloved,
Our paths are separate, but our plans
Are followed closely as of old,
Within the hollow of God's hands.
And should we never meet again
Within this world of shame and sin,
There'll stand between your soul and mine
The memories of what might have been.

"Life's Leaves"

MISS M. W. AVERILL.—The author of the poem called "Life's Leaves" and inquired for by "J. I. M." in THE BOOK REVIEW of Jan. 19 is Gaylord J. Clarke, and it was published in The Lockport (N. Y.) Daily Union many years ago.

"Parting at Morning"

ARTHUR POWELL.—The inquiry of Benton W. Clark, in the issue of Nov. 24, relates to Robert Browning's quatrain entitled "Parting at Morning," as follows:

Round the cape of a sudden came the sea,
And the sun looked over the mountain's rim:
And straight was a path of gold for him,
And the need of a world of men for me.

This appeal was also answered by Josephine D. Wilkins, Jamaica, N. Y.; Francis Smith, New York; Elizabeth Andrews, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Jeannette E. Sperry, Brooklyn; Adele L. Alfke, New York; D. M. Townsend, Newburg, N. Y.; Emily R. Sugden, Windsor, Conn.; Edward Morehouse, New York; Isabel N. Tillinghast, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Josephine Rice Creelman, Auburn, N. Y.; Mrs. Hannibal Williams, Cambridge, N. Y.; C. H. Harman, Baltimore, Md.; Anne Seymour Griggs, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Edith Horton, Ithaca, N. Y.; Harriet Headrick, New York; Margaret Moberly, New York; A. H. Sabin, Flushing, N. Y.; Marie A. Davidson, Elizabeth, N. J.; Fanny Cannon, New York; Lafayette Lenz Butler, Hazleton, Penn.; W. E. Munroe, Akron, Ohio; George A. True, Detroit, Mich., and Anna Ruth Livingston, Aldine, Texas.

"Our Own"

R. J. C.—The poem "Our Own," which was asked for by one of your correspondents recently, is by Margaret T. Sangster and is as follows:

If I had known in the morning
How wearily all the day
The word unkind
Would trouble my mind
I said when you went away,
I had been more careful, darling,
Nor given you needless pain,
But we vex "our own"
With look and tone
We may never take back again.

For though in the quiet evening
You may give me the kiss of peace,
Yet it might be
That never for me
The pain of the heart should cease.
How many go forth in the morning
That never come home at night,
And hearts have broken
For harsh words spoken
That sorrow can ne'er set right.

We have careful thoughts for the stranger,
And smiles for the sometime guest;
But oft for "our own"
The bitter tone,
Though we love "our own" the best.
Oh! lips with the curve impatient!
Oh, brow, with that look of scorn!
'Twere a cruel fate
Were the night too late
To undo the work of morn.

"The Little House"

EUGENE DE RIVERA.—The beautiful poem, "The Little House," for which "M. J." asked in THE BOOK REVIEW of Jan. 12, is by Maxwell Struthers Burt, and is as follows:

And I said to myself I will build a house
The day my Love comes by,
And there shall be much of a river wind,
and much of the open sky;
With a singing bird to wake us, and a great rose red and high.

A great rose red and high and near,
And shaken by the bees;
Close in the shadow of gold-green vines and a depth of green-gold trees;
And night will bring a cool of dreams like rain upon the breeze.

There will be gift of laughter given
When the sun is brave in the blue;
And there will be gift of quiet, come with the dusk and the dew;
Till the wonder of each shining hour will soak us through and through.

O little house of river winds,
O house so hid and neat,
The white, long road that leads to you is cruel to weary feet,
Yet—with my Love for company—even the dust treads sweet.

APPEALS TO READERS

MISS F. C. MINOR.—Can some of your readers help me find the words of the poem from which the following lines are quoted? I think it was written by Sir Owen Seaman and was printed in Punch:

When the war is over and the Kaiser's out of print,
I'm going to buy some tortoises and watch the beggars sprint;
When the war is over and the sword at last we sheathe,
I'm going to keep a jellyfish and listen to it breathe.

"Rest"

A. B.—Somewhere I have read a poem entitled "Rest," in which are the following lines:

As a tired mother leads by the hand her little child to bed,
Half-willing, half-reluctant to be lead,
And leaves his broken playthings on the floor, &c.

Can any reader tell me who the author is and quote the entire poem?

"In the British Museum"

C. M. J.—Can any of your readers tell me where I may find Richard Aldington's poem, "In the British Museum"? I have been unable to find any trace of it.

"Ode to the Wind"

J. C. CARTRIGHT.—Can any of your readers tell me of the author of the poem "Ode to the Wind," two stanzas of which are given here, and where a full copy may be obtained?

Hush, morning wind that murmurs past,
With thy low, sad wailings filled,
Peace, peace to the voice of the lonely blast
Wind, lonely wind, be stilled.

Some spirit of sadness thou must bear,
O wind, upon thy rushing wings;
And this is the wailing sound I hear,
Which that sorrowing spirit sings.

"Mount Albini"

C. B. ROLLINS.—Can any of your readers tell me where I can find a novel very popular about 1875-80, by name "Mount Albini"? I do not know the author's name.

"The White Maid"

S. E. BECK.—Can some reader tell me who wrote the following poem? Is it a fragment of a longer poem?

O the white maid and the white horse and the flapping banner of God.
Black hearts riding for money. Red hearts riding for fame,
The maid who rode for France and the King who rode for shame.
Gentleman, fool, and saint riding in Christ's high name.

An Old World Romance

AARON RABINOWITZ.—Can one of your readers help me to procure a copy of a short story entitled "An Old World Romance," by William J. Locke, which appeared in The Saturday Evening Post on Nov. 25, 1909? I am interested to know whether the same has appeared in book form.

"Hellgate of Soissons"

J. P. M.—Can any readers advise me as to where I can obtain a copy of the poem "The Hellgate of Soissons"? I do not know the name of the author. The poem was recited recently by Miss Alice Brady.

Happiness

J. W. HANNON.—I have failed in tracing the origin of the following quotation:

Get your happiness out of your work, or you will never know what happiness is.

Perhaps some of your readers may be able to help me.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

COLONEL ROOSEVELT'S BIOGRAPHY

THE authorized biography of Theodore Roosevelt will be published by Charles Scribner's Sons at some date in the near future not yet determined. Of all the many books about Colonel Roosevelt already written and yet to come this will without doubt be the most important, since it will be the most self-revelatory and intimate and will carry the sanction of its subject for its method of preparation as well as his approval of many of its finished pages. The work, by Joseph Bucklin Bishop, has been under way for the last year, had been wholly planned and approved before Colonel Roosevelt's death, and the author's progress upon it had been aided by many conversations with him about it. He assigned to Mr. Bishop, who was his intimate personal friend for thirty years, the exclusive use of his official and personal correspondence which is stored in the Library of Congress at Washington. It was Colonel Roosevelt's desire that his letters should be permitted, as far as possible, to tell the story of his public life, and Mr. Bishop is conforming to that wish, so that, since Colonel Roosevelt was one of the most voluminous of letter-writers and included among his correspondents many eminent personages in literary, scientific, artistic, and political affairs in both the United States and other countries, the book will afford not only a self-revelation of its subject, but also, as its background, much picturing of the life of his time.

Another very interesting volume, which will probably appear next Fall, will contain Colonel Roosevelt's letters to his children. Whenever he was separated from them, even while they were very young, he kept up a constant correspondence, sending them frequent letters that entered into their own affairs with the genuine companion spirit. When they were very young his missives were mainly "picture letters" consisting of crude but graphic illustrations which he drew himself. As they grew older he always found time, even in his busiest years in the White House and when he was traveling or exploring, to write regularly to his children long letters full of incident, humor, anecdote, interest in their occupations. In addition to these the book will contain letters to grown-up members of the family describing the doings and sayings of the children. Reproductions of some of the "picture letters" and portraits of the children will illustrate the volume, which will reveal one of the phases of Colonel Roosevelt's many-sided character heretofore but little known outside of his family and intimate friends.

Boni & Liveright are offering a prize for a design for the lining-paper to be used by them in their Modern Library series. All designs must be submitted before March 1. The judges are J. Herbert Duckworth, Louis J. Boche, and Horace B. Liveright.

While not going into detail in any subject the book will aim to give a concise survey of conditions, methods, and achievements in all the phases of the preparation of the fighting forces and of the mobilization of the nation behind them.

Mr. W. S. Wallace, writing in the February Bookman on "The Textbook Poison in Canadian-American Friendship," says that "it would be a matter for congratulation if the American Historical Association, which includes in its membership not only the foremost American historians but also many of the foremost Canadian historians, would institute an Index Expurgatorius of history schoolbooks that promote international discord and urge on the educational authorities of both countries the appropriateness of revising them or discarding them altogether. It would not be amiss, indeed, if all such books were gathered together and burned in public, as the vanities were burned in Florence in Savonarola's time."

Francis Bowes Sayre in his new book on "Experiments in International Administration," just published by Harper & Brothers, says that "The peace settlements of the past have all been founded on purely selfish interests, whether dynastic or national; and they have had as their purpose the guarantee of specific territorial arrangements rather than the guarantee of international justice and law as general principles to be impartially applied. If the treaty of 1919 is to succeed where others have failed it must be founded upon the broad interests of peoples."

happily entitled a "cow-catcher," since the mother of the milky herd was the animal most likely to adventure itself upon the deadly track.

One of the most instructive passages in Dr. Swann's dissertation is that in which he sets forth the difficulty the French had in deciding upon a name for the railroad before they finally came to an agreement to call it a "road of iron," (chemin de fer.) More than half a score other names were proposed and actually got into use—"steam road," (chemin à vapeur,) "locomotive road," (chemin à locomotive,) "road with rails," (chemin à rail,) and "way of iron," (voie de fer.) There were not a few who advocated a borrowing of the British word "railway." For several years the vocabulary was the scene of a struggle for life which resulted at last in the survival of the fittest—"road of iron." And this was the word the Germans adopted when they in their turn began to build railroads—"iron road," (Eisenbahn;) and this adaptation of the word finally accepted by the French is evidence that the Germans were following the French, as the French borrowing of "rail" and "tender" and "tunnel" is evidence that the French had followed the

Dr. Swann also sets before us the host of names employed in France when the French were engaged in developing the horseless carriage and before they finally decided that after all "automobile" was the best word. It was called a "steam-carriage," a "petroleum-carriage," a "mechanical carriage," a "pyroballistic carriage," and a "vélocifère." The last two of these are portentous vocables, and if either of them had been adopted we may be sure that it would have been abbreviated promptly to "pyro" or "vélo" just as "automobile" has been curtailed to "auto." The French primacy in the evolution of the automobile is abundantly disclosed in our English terminology, in which at least half a dozen of the most important words are French—"garage" and "chassis," "chauffeur" and "limousine." As yet no native equivalents have been devised for these foreign terms not yet really assimilated, and, indeed, very difficult to assimilate. Of course, "garage" is certain to acquire in time an English pronunciation—to rhyme appropriately with "carriage." But what is going to happen to "chassis" and to "chauffeur"? Each of them requires an accent on the final syllable, which is contrary to our speech habits. I have been told that in Norfolkshire "chauffeur" has been rather brutally anglicized into "shover," but this does not seem likely to spread beyond the borders of that Tory county.

Although the flying machine was invented in America by the Wrights, working on the foundation laid by Langley, it was taken up more enthusiastically in France. Dr. Swann calls attention to a fact not earlier made known that the French in their search for the new terms needed for the aëroplane drew on the vocabulary of ballooning—just as they had gone to the terminology of canalling for a few of their railroad words. But they could find only a very few useful expressions in the vocabulary of the "aërostat," and they were forced to invent new terms, most of which have been taken over into English. To the French we owe "aviation" and "aëroplane," for example. We have also borrowed from them the word "hangar" to designate the barn in which the airplane is housed, although this French word is the exact equivalent of the English word "shed." We have given to "hangar" the limited meaning of a "shed for airplanes," whereas in French "hangar" means any kind of a shed. This is an example of the errors that any language is likely to make when it helps itself ceaselessly to terms from another tongue.

Although "aëroplane" is still constantly in use in England, it bids fair to be supplanted by "airplane," and this will be an obvious improvement, first because a word of two syllables is simpler than a word of three, and, secondly, because we who speak English have to make a conscious effort to pronounce the first two syllables of "aëroplane." The sound "a-ĕr" seems to be contrary to our speech habits, and we have a tendency to transpose the vowels and to pronounce "a-ĕr" as if it were "a-rĕ." Few of us can have failed to hear the aëroplane called an "arĕoplane." There is in London an organization called the Aërated Bread Company, which operates a chain of dairy lunchrooms; and the cockney commonly speaks of the "Arĕated Bread Company."

In his later chapters Dr. Swann deals with the nomenclature of the French republican calendar and of the decimal system, pointing out the hesitancy with which the new words came into being and the frequency with which suggested terms were accepted, only to be speedily discarded. Then he catalogues the extraordinary variety of new words for new ideas with which the French had suddenly to provide themselves in consequence of their adoption of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity. As they passed from the rule of autocracy to the democracy of a constitutional republic, they had to supply themselves with novel expressions for things unknown to them so long as they were the bondmen of the Bourbon Kings. And he quotes a pertinent passage from Darmesteter:

> Universal suffrage has not always existed in politics—but it has always existed in linguistics. In matters of language the people are all powerful and infallible, because their errors sooner or later establish themselves as lawful.

LATEST WORKS OF FICTION

Prisoner's Defense" is a fairly good spy story, with an effective climax, and "Borrowed Scenes" an amusing skit. "A Point of View" shows how an English footman finally convinced an American journalist who had written somewhat contemptuously about what he called the obsequiousness of the English flunkey, that "an English servant can give good and proper service" and yet be very thoroughly "a 'uman bein' after all." The experiences of a highwayman during "One Crowded Hour" have a place in the volume, while "The Fall of Lord Barrymore" takes us back to the days of Beau Brummell and tells of the rivalry between Lord Barrymore and Sir Charles Tregillis "for the lordship of the kingdom of St. James." Those who are aware of the author's interest in spiritualism and who have perhaps read "The New Revelation" will not be particularly surprised by the climax of "How It Happened," a story which bears a certain relation to Algernon Blackwood's tale "Transition." There are a few grewsome moments in "The Surgeon of Gaster Fell," but the explanation of it all is something of a disappointment, and in fact this new volume, taken as a whole, is scarcely up to the level of its author's usual work. Most of the tales in it are slight, and though they are clever enough and well told they will scarcely satisfy those who have been hoping for more stories like "The Lost World" or "The Poison Belt," not to mention any which have to do with the immortal Mr. Sherlock Holmes.

DAVID AND JONATHAN

DAVID AND JONATHAN. By E. Temple Thurston. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

THE underlying idea of this novel is that civilization is the merest film covering our primitive impulses. The saying "Scratch a Russian and the Tartar will show" might be written "Scratch a human being and the savage will show," according to the thesis of Mr. Thurston's new story. David and Jonathan have been friends for many years. At school rivalry led them to a fight, but, beginning with that fight, a deep friendship has sprung up between them. The difference between the two men is dwelt upon: Jonathan, physically very strong, active, a "red blood"; David, intuitive, subtle, imaginative. Both men remain bachelors and when they are nearing forty they decide to go to Africa to hunt and to get really acquainted with each other, to discover what life really means to them fundamentally. Their ship is wrecked and they are cast on the shore of Africa.

The complication comes with Joan. They find her nearly drowned in a boat from the Malaga, the lost ship. Of course both fall in love with her, these two men to whom love has never come before. Both are infinitely attracted, Jonathan, less given to introspection, without his knowing it, David consciously. The instinct seems somewhat of a revelation to the subtle David:

> I have come to believe that the instinct of the sexes is still far more elemental in us and more easily roused than any other and is only distracted by the thousand and various interests with which civilization occupies our minds.

This only reminds us of Horatio's remark to Hamlet: "There needs no ghost, my lord, come from the grave, to tell us this." Any elementary book of psychology will tell it to you; in fact, we know that even highly civilized people who are not wrecked on a desert island are often so distracted. Parnell and Sir Charles Dilke, without leaving the heart of London, wrecked their careers by just such diversion.

The story resolves itself into a struggle between the two men for the woman, not a physical but a psychological struggle. At times one wishes the struggle were physical; the insistence on David's superior understanding becomes rather tiresome. In the end a ship comes to bring relief. The suspense is kept up to the end because the reader does not know which of the two men the heroine will choose. In fact, her final choice is likely to strike the average reader with a surprise.

THE EAGLE'S EYE

THE EAGLE'S EYE. By William J. Flynn. Novelized by Courtney Riley Cooper. New York: Prospect Press, Inc. $1.50.

THOUGH presented in fictional form, this novel is based on fact, on the report of German war activities in the United States since the beginning of the European war. By the Bernstorffs and von Papens and Boy-Eds this country was regarded as "the American front"; it was their business, first, to do everything in their power to impede the sending of munitions and supplies to the Allies, and, second, to influence American public

"Give Us Zane Grey"

"The demand comes not only from the hospitals, but from the large camps, from the battleships, from the overseas men"—this is from the assistant director of the American Library Association, who knows what the boys want. He is simply telling what interests them, what they delight to read—"what they cannot get enough of."

There is no sawdust in the veins of Zane Grey's people—they are out-of-door folks. Human nature remains uncurbed—violent—in the large spaces among the Western trails. That is why the soldiers like him so—that is why you will like him when you read his latest exciting story of the Far West.

It is the higher spiritual quality, something bigger and finer than melodrama, that induced this demand, not only the red-blooded action of his books.

Book after book, each one greater than the last, shows that he is fast rising to the zenith of his powers.

THE MODERN LIBRARY

ONE is apt to think of a "modern library" as being a collection of essentially up-to-the-minute books, from which such venerable relics as the classics or, indeed, anything that comes from so recent a period as the last century have been excluded—just as, in architectural parlance, the modern house calls up visions of stucco walls and picturesque buildings based on rehabilitated Tudor designs in which there is no trace of ornate mid-Victorian enormities. But, after all, the term modern is a relative one. Compared with the pictographs that reach us from prehistoric times the Homeric poems belong to modern literature—while, conversely, books that are younger, by a score of centuries, than the "Iliad" and "Odyssey" may still be classed as more ancient than these. Hence, there may be—and we believe there is—the best of reasons for including a volume of "Villon's Poems" among the latest publications that have reached us of that very excellent series, "The Modern Library," (BONI & LIVERIGHT.) For one thing, English translations of VILLON are none too accessible to the average reader. And then, to go back to the modernity of this poet, who was born in the year 1431, the year of JEANNE D'ARC'S martyrdom, his contribution to literature, neglected for ages, became a potent influence among the French realists of the last few decades, as well as with that school of English poets who were the radicals of the closing years of the nineteenth century. The present delightful little edition of VILLON contains the translation of his poems by JOHN PAYNE, together with the latter's long biographical introduction, first published in 1881 and reprinted here with needed supplementary matter. Except for the passing glimpse of him given in STEVENSON'S immortal sketch, a knowledge of VILLON'S life and personality is not easily attainable. PAYNE'S sketch is as full of detail as the original sources render possible—and the life he portrays, be it noted, is the most amazing to be found in any literature. There was scarcely a crime, venial or the reverse, of which VILLON was not guilty. He was the supreme Bohemian in letters, an outlaw guilty of great and petty meannesses that his warmest admirers find hard to condone. But he wrote "with the pen of an angel." His poems are a unique transcript of humanity's griefs and shortcomings. There is pathos beneath their sardonic humor, a pathos that appeals peculiarly to twentieth century readers, and it is this quality, perhaps, more than his brilliant cynicism, his fascinating Bohemianism, that gives VILLON his vogue today.

BUT the reader of VILLON'S poems will miss in them much of the hearty, robust spirit that still endears to us the earliest of English singers. The latter write out of a heart bubbling over with perpetual youthfulness, while the muse of VILLON draws inspiration from experiences that come with the frosts of age. As PAYNE points out, there is not a reference in all his poems to the joys and beauties of nature. One looks in vain for so typical, smiling a passage as that with which CHAUCER preludes his great poem—

soote,
The drought of Marche hath perced to the roote.

But that is merely saying that VILLON is himself and not CHAUCER — the father of modern French, not English literature. Both men gave the impetus to their respective nations that still bears fruit of the best that we have in letters. And it is significant that just so far as the beauty and sincerity of these two first poets fail to impress their literary posterity, the work of the latter grows artificial, lacking in virility and all those sterling qualities that make of poetry a great uplifting force in a nation's life.

CHEEK by jowl with this volume of VILLON, The Modern Library publishes a selection of President WILSON'S "Addresses and Public Papers," commencing with the year 1913 and ending with December, 1918; a collection of essays by ELLEN KEY, HAVELOCK ELLIS, G. LOWES DICKINSON, and others on "The Woman Question," and one of GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO'S early novels, "Il Fuoco," translated by KASSANDRA VIVARIA some twenty years ago, and here republished under the title "The Flame of Life." There have been numerous collections of Mr. WILSON'S utterances bearing on the war, but none more comprehensive and, at the same time, so low in price as this one, edited by ALBERT BUSHNELL HART. The Woman Question, also, seems to have a perennial interest for students of contemporary affairs, and, as it is presented in this anthology of opinion, finds an appropriate place in a library of this kind. But this gift of modernity seems lacking in "The Flame of Life." In form, of course, the latter is ultra-modern; but the spirit of the romance shows a decadence, an unreality that happily we have outlived. VILLON'S poems are far more modern than this specimen of an art that was once all too popular. Now that D'ANNUNZIO'S experiences have crowned him one of the true heroes of the great war, we doubt if he could ever again give to the world so ineffectual a story as "The Flame of Life."

IN reading "The Shadow of the Cathedral" it is well to remember, as WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS warns us in his introduction, that the author, VICENTE BLASCO IBANEZ, "is the standard bearer of the scientific revolt in the terms of fiction which spare us no hope of relief in the religious notion of human life here or hereafter that the Hebraic or Christian theology has divined." IBANEZ has ever been "intensively agnostic" in his religious ideas, and this attitude has naturally colored his interpretive studies of the Church in Spain. It is present, naturally, in "The Shadow of the Cathedral," and for many of its readers will dim some of the beauties of that book. But, as Mr. HOWELLS further assures us, the reader who can suffer this agnosticism from the author "will find his book one of the fullest and richest in modern fiction, worthy to rank with the greatest Russian work and beyond anything yet done in English." This is praise of the highest order, especially as coming from Mr. HOWELLS, whose unbounded admiration for Russian fiction has been eloquently proclaimed on more than one occasion for many years past. But, judging even from the few novels by IBANEZ that have reached us so far in translation, it is praise that to many readers will not seem exaggerated. Most of us will agree also with Mr. HOWELLS in failing to find quite the degree of Zolaistic coloring in IBANEZ'S work that his Spanish critics tell us is there. Although thoroughly realistic in method and portrayal, there is an ideality, a wave of human sympathy and emotion sweeping through the pages both of "The Cabin" and "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" that is usually missing in the typical Zola novel. The civilized world has progressed through more than one vital experience since the comparatively recent period that, in fiction, we think of as belonging to ZOLA and his fellow realists; and it is because IBANEZ possesses in a higher degree than these predecessors of his the poetic feeling as well as the naturalistic art needed to portray this new world that his books are impressing themselves upon our literature with such undeniable power and wealth of beauty.

opinion in their favor. Though this book covers a vast range of their activities, it does not exhaust them; it was written before the recent Senate investigations, and there is no mention in the book of the insidious German press propaganda. But there is enough: the sinking of the Lusitania, (for which medals were struck off [illegible] pened,) the naval ball conspiracy, the plot to destroy the fleet, the effort to disorganize labor, especially in the longshoremen's strike; the efforts, many times successful, to destroy munition plants; the burning of Hopewell, Va.; the Welland Canal conspiracy, the I. W. W. menace. It is these combined activities which furnish the action of the story: Bernstorff, Albert, von Papen, Boy-Ed, Rintelen, Fay, are all mentioned in person; the only fictional characters are Grant, a detective, and Dixie Mason, an actress, who wins the confidence of German spies to their undoing.

How little the story departs from the facts is shown by the following quotation:

> So it was that in the spending of that $50,000,000 Franz von Rintelen had built himself up practically a separate organization with which he preyed upon shipping, industry and manufacture. River pirates who swarmed the Hudson to scuttle lighters, to start fires in cargoes, to cut hawsers and mangle the steering apparatus of tugs that they might crash into each other and sink their cargoes; so-called "Peace Councils" which strove for the spreading of propaganda on any kind of peace at any price—as long as it was favorable to Germany; alleged "Embargo Conferences," the sole object of which was to spread a feeling throughout America that it was wrong for the United States to manufacture arms and ammunition which could be sold to the Allies—all these things lay within the province of Franz von Rintelen, to handle as he chose, with only an occasional conference with Bernstorff, at which he told of his progress and laid forth his expense account for the official signature of the head of Germany's spy system in America.

It is sufficient comment on Germany's methods in America before the war that even her Ambassador lends himself admirably for the villain's rôle in melodrama; this story is that truth which is stranger than fiction.

THE THREE SAPPHIRES

THE THREE SAPPHIRES. By W. A. Fraser. Illustrated by Arthur Heming. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.

SOMETIMES one is asked to recommend a war story, or a tale of brave adventure, or a study of wild animals, or a thrilling detective story, or a satisfying love affair; but one seldom finds all these elements so strikingly fused into a convincing whole by the white heat of absorbing interest as in this novel by Mr. Fraser.

The scene of the story is India, that secret, black East India where crafty native princes play off against each other German and English, seeking trade supremacy. The wily Indian prince, Ananda, son and heir of the Maharajah of Darpore, is a handsome young man of engaging manners and never a moral, big or small, to hinder his progress. One of his friends at Oxford is Lord Victor Gilfain, whom he has asked out for elephant shooting. Lord Victor has come rather suddenly. He has tried diplomacy with small success, for he is a transparent youth, and amiably bestows Government secrets on a pretty, clever, young woman who uses the information thus achieved for the benefit of Germany. Gilfain must be got out of her way, and out of England; he must also be watched. Captain Swinton, once Captain Herbert, of the English Secret Service, goes with him.

On the evening of their arrival at the Prince's palace above Darpore, their host diverts them with a dinner party and a wrestling match. They await the other guests on a marble terrace overlooking the lovely city, the palace gardens and menagerie, and the magic lake of the Golden Coin. Of this lovely little lake the young Rajah tells the Englishmen strange stories and stranger prophecies. Centuries before, the body of the former ruler, literally loaded with jewels, had been placed in a golden boat which had then been sunk in the lake. Any thief who had since attempted to pull up the treasure had been drowned, by enchantment; but if a holy man, holding in his hand the Three Sacred Sapphires of their religion, should stand on the terrace in the time of the mwoha blossom, the King would rise in his golden boat and would deliver India from the oppressor.

As the Prince finishes his story, his other guests, the German Dr. Boelke, his private archaeologist, and Major Finnerty, a splendid Irishman, head of the English foresters, drive up. Finnerty shows the others an uncut oval sapphire as large as a hen's egg. This jewel had been the clapper of a bell hung about the neck of a great sacred elephant which had wandered down from the mountain into the Irishman's compound.

While the Major is displaying his marvel, Swinton notices eager glances passing between [illegible] Then the German deliberately insults the British race and obliges Finnerty to fight one of Ananda's trained wrestlers. During the match, Boelke contrives to overturn the table where the sapphire has been laid, and when Finnerty, victorious, returns to the terrace, he cannot find his new treasure. Swinton, recalling the Prince's story of the Three Sacred Sapphires, which shall deliver India, suspects his royal host, but can do nothing. Unfortunately, the royal host suspects Swinton, remembers stories of pale-eyed Captain Herbert of the Secret Service, and cleverly surmises that the bland Englishman has come to India with a deeper mission than the nullifying of Gilfain's mistakes.

From here on the story is full of adventure tinged with that atmosphere of mystery suggested by its theme and setting. And it ends, as all such stories should, with the happiness of the principal characters and the satisfaction of the reader.

SINISTER HOUSE

SINISTER HOUSE. By Leland Hall. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.50.

THIS is a mystery story of a strangely appealing quality. Against the background of a typical American suburb, the houses of which, in the words of the contemptuous artist Giles, look like "garages and schools," the author has managed to project a genuine atmosphere of horror. The house of the title is not a concrete dwelling like the one inhabited by the narrator and his wife; it is a gloomy old place on a cliff, kept in shadow on the brightest days by a clump of half-rotten ferns, lit by gas and candles, hung with heavy curtains, which later in the story form an effective screen for the silhouettes of horrid and unearthly visitors.

This house is occupied by Eric Grier and his wife, Julia. They are two charming people, and Pierre, who tells the story, and his wife, Annette, are very fond of them both. Annette, it is true, cannot understand why the Griers persist in living in an insanitary house like theirs when they might be occupying a nice concrete dwelling like their own, with open plumbing and electricity. The author has done an ingenious thing in making the strange events of the story unfold themselves to us through the eyes of two people so absolutely practical and "unghostly" as Pierre and Annette. "If Pierre will see a ghost," the reader says to himself, "why, there must have been a ghost there!" For Pierre is made quite thoroughly clear to us before the occult events concerning the Griers begin as a cheerful, kindly, singularly untemperamental person, of bounding health, who likes nothing so much as pottering around in his garden on holidays and driving his little boy around in his Ford. The Ford indeed plays a prominent part in this story. It is somewhat of a triumph to make this unromantic vehicle a factor in a mystery story, but it is characteristic of the author's method. He has managed to evoke horror with the use of commonplace materials.

The story is just the right length; mystery stories should not be too long to read at one sitting. And it is safe to say that no reader will postpone "Sinister House" to a second.

ROOM NUMBER 3

ROOM NUMBER 3. By Anna Katherine Green. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

The stories in this collection were formerly published under the title "Masterpieces of Mystery," a volume which has been out of print for several years. The new form in which the stories appear is attractive and the collection justifies reprinting. There are thrills in plenty—exquisite amethyst boxes containing marvelously wrought vials of the subtlest poison, little steel coils whose secret springs bring death at the merest prick, lost rubies of fabulous price, mysterious rooms with capricious wall-papers, chutes and trapdoors which open suddenly and plunge innocent men to death in the East River, gray ladies and misty houses and other sinister paraphernalia—they are all here to delight the heart of the lover of mystery stories. Moreover, Mrs. Green has made ingenious use of her materials, the plots are intricate and novel, and many of the stories contain an element of surprise at the end which even the most sophisticated reader of mystery stories could not foresee.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

rout. We had tasted his blood and we had not forgotten the blood of our own who had been slain. * * * And the men who had done it, that battalion of the Fifth Marines, were the ones who had walked all the way to Belleau Wood two days before, when their camions broke down.

Besides a complete history of the action of the American marines during the war the author gives a sketch of their history on land and sea since their organization. They were first organized by resolution of the Continental Congress on Nov. 10, 1775. They served in the Revolution, the war with Tripoli, the war of 1812, the Mexican war, the civil war, and a hundred affairs of less importance. It is no wonder the name has come to be a symbol for bravery all over the civilized world. This reputation is the more understandable after we read this modest, self-effacing yet nevertheless glowing record of a man who took command in battles already immortal.

THE WOMAN CITIZEN

THE YOUNG WOMAN CITIZEN. By Mary Austin. New York: The Woman's Press. $1.35.

THE WOMAN CITIZEN: A General Handbook of Civics, with Special Consideration of Women's Citizenship. By Mary Sumner Boyd, Chairman of the Research Department of the Leslie Bureau of Suffrage Education. With an Introduction by Carrie Chapman Catt, President of the International Woman's Suffrage Alliance and President of the National American Woman Suffrage Association. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1.50.

SINCE the franchise was extended to the women of New York State a number of "women voters' handbooks" have been published, some brief guideposts on the road to citizenship in New York, others more general studies. Neither of these books comes under the first named head. "The Woman Citizen" is a collection of facts from many parts of the country, a consideration of many conditions in our national, State, and community life. Mrs. Austin's book, on the other hand, cannot be classified as a "handbook" at all.

"The Young Woman Citizen" is a most excellent book, a call to service, indeed, to the young women of America. The foreword states:

> The significance of this book is its insistence upon conscious preparation for citizenship as wide as the world itself. The writer does not dictate what the young woman citizen must do to build into the world democracy to which America is so surely committed; she has chosen rather to set up certain guideposts for a working philosophy of citizenship. The fundamental conviction on which the book is built is that the new day in world politics will come only through the combined efforts of men and women who have faith in each other and are willing to pay the costs of social awareness.

And throughout the book is indeed the presentation of a "working philosophy of citizenship." It is not a handbook that tells how the Vice President is elected or what is the number of Congressional Representatives apportioned to the City of New York; it does not even relate the stories of great political events, good and bad, in our history; rather does it point out the responsibilities, the duties, the privileges, of that service that is citizenship. The book is full of pregnant paragraphs, suggestive sentences. It is written in a style that is pleasing withal, as well as stimulating, and the young woman citizen owes the author very real thanks.

Not the least valuable feature of the volume is its fine bibliography on matters relating to citizenship and democracy.

Mrs. Boyd's handbook is a mass of information, clearly and interestingly presented, with little anecdotes and [illegible] here and there to keep the array of information from being heavy or dull. The book is in two parts, "Acquiring Citizenship" and "Applying Citizenship," with appendices that state the general principles of the leading parties. The volume also includes the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

ECHOES AND REALITIES

ECHOES AND REALITIES. By Walter Prichard Eaton. George H. Doran Company. $1.50.

FEW books leave a clearer impression of their author as a man than does "Echoes and Realities." If the reader had never heard of Mr. Eaton except through the present book, he could reconstruct him, were he a reasonably discerning reader, as accurately as Agassiz is said to have reconstructed the fish from a single bone presented to him. It is a wholly pleasant impression, too. As truly as though we had seen Mr. Eaton in the flesh, we know him to be gentle and fine-natured, a hater of crowds, a good deal of an idealist, a sincere lover of beauty, by instinct a naturalist, and by reason one of those men who seem radical to themselves and a bit old-fashioned to the radicals.

Two or three of the poems in "Echoes and Realities," written shortly after America entered the world war, reveal a leaning toward pacifism which many otherwise gentle readers will hardly sympathize with, but whose sincerity is vouched for by the fact that their author is not now rampantly shouting on the other side, as so many early pacifists are doing. In fact, it took a certain courage to include these poems in a book published after the complexion of events had so markedly changed from what they were when they were written; a courage which deserves better, in a sense, than it will receive; for "Preparedness" and "Town Meeting" carry their penalty with them, in being the poorest poems in the book, not only from a patriotic but from a literary point of view.

Lovers of Mr. Eaton's work will be glad, however, to find most of the poems in "Echoes and Realities" concerned with the subjects for which the author has an instinctive, not a reasoned, passion, and upon which he speaks with an authentic accent—the fields and mountains and forests of his beloved Atlantic seaboard. Here he is at home. He tells us how

> A goldfinch swoops into the cosmos plants
> To sway there like a Japanese design;

how in the slow, fine rain of a January thaw, the needles of the dripping pines cling together until

> It seemed the trees were thinner, and let through > More of the gray light than on sunny days, and how toward night

> A wind arose and shook the pines to speech * * *
> The west broke clear; the pools on lawn and bed
> Were crinkled into gold; a bird sang out
> To bid the day farewell.

Dozens of lines like these might be quoted, lines full of a lover's close observation, closer even than that of the scientist, and expressed, if not with any startling originality, at least with sweetness, simplicity, and dignity. We confess that we wish that Mr. Eaton might have refrained from mentioning the "pad" upon which he indites these lines—it is not a beautiful word, and the public really doesn't care whether he makes his nature-notes upon paper or upon his cuff.

MORE "MABLE" LETTERS

"THAT'S ME ALL OVER, MABLE." By E. Streeter. Illustrated by Corporal Breck. New York: Frederick A. Stokes. 75 cents.

THE author of "Dere Mable, The Love Letters of a Rookie," here continues his learned and passionate epistles. These letters might cure a confirmed melancholia; the humor of the Dere Mable letters remains undiminished. Bill is in a Southern camp, he describes his military duties, his jail-sentence, the stupidity and mysteriousness of military life. Almost every page is quotable; here is a sample of Bill's genial observation:

> Im goin to send you one of the torpetoes they shoot out of the guns. There lyin all over the lot. As far as I can see there just as good as new. The Captin said not to touch any of em case they mightent have exploded and was liable to go off when you handled them. I asked them where they was going to but he couldnt see a joke if you hit him with it. Im not taking no chances though Mable. I always carry a hammer and I pound each one of them good before I pick em up.
> Im beginning to think all this stuff about the [illegible] bein wild is a lot of fake. I been out with Angus Mackenzie three times huntin stills an the nearest thing we found to one was a fello what sold Bevo. An they don't seem to be very wild. They come round and get our dirty wash every day or two and the only wild thing is me when they bring it back. They all seem to be mixed up on the shavin regulashuns. They shave there necks and let there whiskers grow.
> Give my regards to your mother and as far as Im concerned to your father to.
> Yours till better times
> BILL.

Bill's experience when he goes into society, his adventures with the lady who wore "nothin' but jewels," his witty sallies at the minister's dinner, his secrecy when about to sail for France, and his letters from the ship add to the gayety of nations. Here is a Marconigram Bill sends from the boat:

> Dere Mable: Not feelin well today so am sendin this instead of ritin. Aint seasick. Just somethin the matter with my stummick. Angus Mackenzie, skotch fello, says thats me all over, Mable. I says its all over with me. Bright and funny to the last. Eh, Mable. Guess we'll all be sunk soon now. It'll be a change to have somethin goin down. I cant say any more cause this is costin me 1 dollar ($1) a word. Wouldnt have said this much but I borrowed the money from Joe Loomis. Hed have spent it for somethin foolish anyhow. Yours through all ups and downs.—Bill.

SOLDIERS IN FRANCE

A SOLDIER'S MOTHER IN FRANCE. By Rheta Childe Dorr. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company. $1.50.

MRS. DORR'S book is written primarily for the parents of soldiers in France. Her own son was in the service and wounded at Cantigny, so her point of view is not that of the mere newspaper correspondent. Things which might otherwise have escaped her emerged into salience because of her personal, as well as patriotic, interest in the American forces. She describes conditions which the average American soldier had to meet, his chances for health, moral and physical, hospital conditions in the army, treatment of wounds, the food and discipline, the work of the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross, of the soldier police in Paris. When she interviewed General Pershing she left him with a sense of relief; she felt that her son was safe in the care of such a man as he. Her book is full of advice and encouragement to those with sons and relatives abroad; advice as to writing letters, glowing eulogy of the heroic efforts of the medical men to cure and alleviate disease.

But Mrs. Dorr's narrative has abundant interest for the general reader even now that the war is over. There seem to be few aspects of the war in France that she did not look into; she saw Clemenceau and Albert Thomas, the Socialist leader; General Pershing, and Mme. Avril de Ste. Croix, who is doing wonderful work in a repatriation hospital. She tells what the war has done for the Americans, physically and mentally. One of the most interesting chapters, "Our Boys Discover the Past," is devoted to refuting the pacifist objection to war, that it interferes with education:

> One of the stock arguments of the pacifists in trying to make war out an unmixed evil is that it sets back education. I am sure that many American mothers have had misgivings on this point, and have deplored the necessity of interrupting their sons' college life. But I want to assure them that their sons are learning more in France than any college could have taught them. They are learning French, for one thing, at least all the enterprising ones are. Not the foolish, academic sort of thing they study in high school and college, the object being to read Molière and the classics, but the living language.

Another thing the war has done for many of our soldiers, according to the author, is to instill in wavering souls a deep sense of nationalism where there was none before.

> There is one thing our soldier sons are learning in France that is more valuable than the French language or history or any mere historical acquisition. Our men are learning the true meaning of nationalism, love of country and the flag.
> Of late years we have had in the United States such a deluge of talk about "internationalism" that our young men had almost reached the point of being ashamed to feel patriotism. An insidious propaganda of pacifism, beginning in elementary schools all over the country, had undermined the old American pride in the flag.

Mrs. Dorr goes on to give examples of young men who joined the army in this tepid spirit who became ardent Americans and who will always remain so. This is one of the interesting discoveries she made on a journey which she has recounted in an informing and often eloquent book.

A CRY TO THE CROSS

A CRY TO THE CROSS THAT WAS IN VAIN. By Charles Edward Alleyne MacGeachy. New York: Published by the author.

Walking one day in Montreal the author of this invocation to the Pope at Rome to intercede in the war was impressed by the power of the Catholic Church over the mass of the people. As the procession of priests, monks, choristers, nuns, and other celebrants passed out of the cathedral, pedestrians bared their heads "and even the wheeled traffic halted in respect until the procession disappeared back into the church." But what impressed the author most was the attitude of the laboring men in the vicinity of the cathedral. These, not content with baring their heads, "at once laid down their shovels and pickaxes, removed their hats, bowed heads, folded arms, and kneeled right upon the thick slimy mud where they had been working, and maintained that reverential pose until the solemn spectacle passed from their sight." It struck the author at once that if the Pope used this mighty influence he might be successful in stopping the war. He wrote the invocation, now printed for the first time, and sent it to the Vatican. It met, however, with no response. Hence, Mr. MacGeachy's title, "A Cry to the Cross That Was in Vain."

IBANEZ' "THE SHADOW OF THE CATHEDRAL"

THE SHADOW OF THE CATHEDRAL. By Vicente Blasco Ibañez. With introduction by W. D. Howells. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.90 net.

THE great Cathedral of Toledo, at once a part and a symbol of that vast ecclesiastical structure which has so long dominated Spanish thought and Spanish life, is the centre of Vicente Blasco Ibañez's remarkable novel. Protector and oppressor, friend and foe, the huge old building becomes for the reader well-nigh a living creature, a creature at once fearsome and pitiable. Its shadow rests directly on the little group of people who appear in the book, dwellers all of them within the precincts of the Cathedral, and its servants; but in the author's view, that shadow extends much further, stretching out over all Spain, stifling thought, arresting development. And this shadow and its effects he traces back throughout the history of his native country, to its beginning in that triumph of religious fanaticism which expelled the Moors, and the coming of the foreigners, those Austrian Kings among whom were the great Carlos and his son, Philip II. It is indeed noteworthy and very interesting to find that in this novel, written before the coming of the great war, Ibañez points out the fact that the "cold cruelty" and religious intolerance which "foreign historians consider a purely Spanish product was really imported by the German Caesars. It was the German friar who came with his devout brutality and his crazy theology, not tempered as in Spain by Semitic culture." And from the leaden weight beneath which these crushed her Spain is only now beginning to struggle to free herself.

Something of that still feeble struggle appears in this book, which portrays with an unsparing truthfulness certain results of the long tragedy of Spain and its slow decadence. As in that wonderful novel "The Cabin" he showed us the country-folk of Spain, so in this book does Ibañez show us the servants and rulers of the Church, with the Cardinal Archbishop of Toledo at their head. It is a little world apart, this of the dwellers in the Cathedral. And they are literally dwellers in the Cathedral, living as most of them do in the "Claverias" or upper cloisters, where are the little groups of rooms, the "habitaciones" assigned to the bell ringer, the "Wooden Staff," whose duty it was to keep order and quiet in the church during service, the organist, or Chapel-master, and various other functionaries with their families. A leisurely, gossiping, poverty-stricken, under-fed little community, almost unbelievably ignorant, living mentally and morally in the Midde Ages, fearing the wrath of the Archbishop as they feared nothing else, and finding their greatest excitement in his violent quarrels with his canons. Suddenly into this dim, secluded, mediaeval world comes Gabriel Luna, the dying revolutionist who is the leading character in the book and its author's mouthpiece.

Born in the "Claverias," son of a family which through generation after generation had served the Cathedral, and himself destined for the priesthood in his brilliant youth, Gabriel Luna has lived a wandering life full of misery and hardships. When he left the seminary to fight in the revolution it was in the spirit of a crusader. His first disillusionment came in the army; then followed years spent in France, and the gradual yet rapid change which transformed the devout seminarist into an agnostic. But Gabriel's was an essentially religious and proselytizing temperament, and he quickly threw himself into the war "against the social injustice that condemned millions of beings to poverty and misery for the happiness of a few privileged thousands." But though he regarded authority as "the greatest enemy," his natural gentleness made him abhor all violence. An idealist, he fixed his gaze on a distant future when "the idea" would triumph through the evolution of mankind toward perfection. Many of those with whom he was associated, however, did not share his horror of bombs and dynamite; accused of crimes he held in genuine abhorrence, Gabriel, who had returned to Spain after years of wandering over the Continent, was imprisoned and treated with such hideous cruelty that he came forth an old man, with the hand of death already upon him. Hounded by the police, unable, because of his wrecked lungs, to live in England, "although England with its absolute liberty was the only land where he could have lived quietly and ignored," he returned to Spain and to the Cathedral where his brother still lived in the "habitacion" which had been that of their parents. It is with his coming that the book opens.

No man can escape from himself; Gabriel, intending to remain as silent and as unobtrusive as one of the stones of the Cathedral, soon finds himself surrounded by a little group of admirers who want to hear about his travels. At first he only tells them tales of the different countries he has visited, but little by little the ardor of his beliefs and his proselytizing spirit begin to dominate him. The old eloquence flows back upon him, and he pours his hopes and ideals into the eager, uncomprehending ears of his utterly ignorant listeners. The result is inevitable. The one thing in all his teaching which makes a real impression on his hearers is the idea that "a certain portion of human felicity belonged to them," and this they resolved to possess immediately. At last Gabriel realizes that he has tried "to teach these ignorant people in a few months what required a whole life of thought and study. * * * In removing from the dulled brains the prejudices of ignorance and the superstitions of the slave, he had only succeeded in making them daring for evil." And in that tragedy of flesh and of spirit, which is the great culminating moment of the book, Gabriel's beautiful, idealistic, and visionary teachings bear terrible fruit of theft and murder. It is the same awful and ironic drama which has been enacted over and over again through all the ages.

And it is all the more terrible, because none of these people is really wicked. As wise old Aunt Tomasa, the gardener's widow, tells her one-time playmate and present friend, the Cardinal Archbishop, "they are men, nothing but men." The fiery old Prince of the Church himself, forced by his position to deny what is best and truest in him, the hard-working, poverty-stricken cobbler whose baby dies of hunger, these and all the rest of the little group who become so real to us as we meet them in these pages, all have their good qualities, their kindly feelings, and their aspirations. They are real people; the author shows us their souls, and in thus revealing them and the forces which have made them what they are reveals something, too, of the soul of Spain.

Broad in scope, vivid and impressive in its delineation of individual and social problems, dramatic at times, and always absorbingly interesting, "The Shadow of the Cathedral" is worthy of its author, one of the greatest, if, indeed, he be not the greatest, of living novelists.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

THE LIFE OF DAVID BELASCO. By William Winter. In two volumes. Illustrated. New York: Moffat, Yard & Co. $11.

WILLIAM WINTER was at work upon his "Life of David Belasco" up to the last day of his life. The dedication, to the memory of Belasco's mother, was the last thing that he wrote. He left the work, as a whole, almost completed, and in the months since his death his son, Jefferson Winter, has finished it according to the writer's notes. It stands now as a monumental work, indeed, not only a life of a prominent stage manager, but a record of much that is interesting in the last half century of the American stage.

It was, indeed, as part of a history of the theatre in the United States that Mr. Winter first planned his life of Belasco. That was in 1913. For various reasons, however, the actual writing of the memoir—it was as a memoir that the "life" was regarded by its author—was not begun until October, 1916. From then until his death, June 30, 1917, Mr. Winter was at work on it almost constantly.

Nor was the task easy. Jefferson Winter points out that the supposition that information about a man still living would be of necessity easy to gather has been [illegible] place, the material that would have been the great treasure trove in gathering information about Belasco's early career was all destroyed in the San Francisco fire in 1906. Furthermore, Mr. Belasco confesses to a wretched memory. His own recollections of dates and chronological records were frankly unreliable. His biographer has had to verify, and often to correct, his remembrances of this kind. The finished work of Mr. Winter's "Life of David Belasco" is the more, therefore, to be admired.

It is, first, the record of an interesting career, and, second, a book of American stage history. David Belasco was born in a cellar in San Francisco on July 25, 1853, at a time when the fortunes of his parents were at a desperately low ebb. Humphrey Abraham Belasco, the producer's father, was an English harlequin, who, finding his calling more successful than remunerative, gave it up in 1852 and emigrated to California—dreaming of a fortune in the goldfields there. He never made his fortune, but as a shopkeeper in San Francisco, and later in Victoria, B. C., he rallied from the bitter poverty in which his first child was born. He is remembered as a modest, lovable person, says Mr. Winter; but he was never very prosperous; and David Belasco was a poor boy, who went to work, doing whatever odd jobs he could, when he was little more than a child.

He evinced very early, however, his fondness for the theatre. He recited in public. He appeared in juvenile parts at the Victoria Theatre, playing the little Duke of York in Charles Kean's production of "King Richard III." there when he was 11. He wrote a play called "Jim Black; or, the Regulator's Revenge," not long after the family had moved back to San Francisco, in 1865; and another, "The Roll of the Drum," which he is positive was composed soon after the death of Abraham Lincoln—which means that it must have been written when he was no more than 12; he was only 11 when Lincoln was killed. He was trained in elocution in San Francisco. He continued in school until 1871, and during the biggest part of the next eight years Mr. Winter describes him as a "nomadic bohemian" who roamed the San Francisco streets at night, recited melodramatic verses or dialogues—sometimes "shockers" of his own composition—in low dives, investigated the worst and the most sensational quarters and happenings of San Francisco, and accumulated a deal of knowledge which was of use to him later, when he was employed in writing sensational melodramas for the theatres of that and other Western cities. Mr. Winter finds it impossible to supply a chronological account of his early stage appearances in San Francisco, but finds mention of "his first appearance in leading business" in a part wherein he "displayed much power" in 1871. As for the parts he played, the list fills pages in Mr. Winter's book. And among the illustrations are interesting portraits of him as Hamlet, Marc Antony, Uncle Tom, Louis XI., Fagin, and Armand Duval.

So on through the picturesque career the record takes us, bringing Belasco to New York, telling of his work as stage manager of the Madison Square Theatre, his early association with Charles Frohman, his acquisition of his first theatre, his determination to make Mrs. Leslie Carter a successful star, and the other and more recent incidents of his work as one of the foremost managers in America. Mr. Winter also writes at length on his conflict with the Theatrical Syndicate.

As a record of a long period in the history of the theatre, where that history touched David Belasco's adventurous career, the interest of Mr. Winter's book is obvious. The illustrations, too, are as interesting as they are numerous—which is saying a good deal, for there are scores of them. Yet Mr. Winter has not written merely as the panegyrist, or as the impersonal biographer. He was the critic always. Through all his friendship for Mr. Belasco and his admiration of the manager's work there were certain points on which he disagreed with him, and he did not hesitate to make those points plain. His references to actors, playwrights, productions, are frankly judging; he has told us what he thought about all these people and things, how they impressed William Winter as critic. That that makes his book all the more interesting goes without saying. The reader may not always agree, of course. But he is sure to find the comments and summaries good reading.

The original cast for each of Mr. Belasco's productions is included, with a short story of every one of the earlier plays and a record of its presentation. A detailed chronology is appended to the book.

WITH OUR MARINES

WITH THE HELP OF GOD AND A FEW MARINES. By Brig. Gen. A. W. Catlin. With the collaboration of Walter A. Dyer. Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.50.

THIS is a business-like war book, the kind one might expect from a soldier who has won the admiration and affection of his men. When we remember that those men were the marines who fought at Belleau Wood the fact takes on a luminous significance. For it is hardly too much to say, as Mr. Dyer says in his introduction, that if justice were done, the battle of Belleau Wood would take its place beside that of Thermopylae and the other crucial battles of the world's history. To continue what Mr. Dyer says on this point:

> We shall need the perspective of time to judge of these things aright, but in the light of the present it is not too much to say that this mêlée in the woods, this bit of struggle for a bit of ground smaller than Central Park, marked the turning point of this whole war. For if the marines had not driven the Germans out of Belleau Wood it must have gone hard with the Allies in that sector. The Germans would, in all probability, have been enabled in another day or two to bring up their reserves and their heavier guns, and nothing but a miracle could have saved Paris. It was the Americans who held that Metz-to-Paris road, and no less a personage than Premier Clemenceau is authority for the statement that the United States marines were unquestionably the saviors of the city. When the engagement was over and the Germans had been driven back, General Degoutte, commanding the Sixth Army of France, signed a special order changing the name of the Bois de Belleau to the Bois de la Brigade de Marine.

Brig. Gen. Catlin led the Sixth Regiment of Marines as Colonel at the battle of Château-Thierry and Belleau Wood, and, after he was shot down by a German sniper, directed a large part of the engagement from the bottom of the trench where he was lying bleeding to death. He was only carried off in the nick of time to save his life. His narrative is the sort we should expect from such a man—terse, direct, vivid. The book is copiously illustrated by diagrams showing terrain, positions of troops, advances, &c. It is too bad we have not had more of this sort of war book, written by professional soldiers with experience and knowledge. General Catlin brings you into the very heart of battle; you do not feel that you are looking through the eyes of a myopic onlooker. Here is an example of his vivid style:

> At the right moment the Americans opened up with a slashing barrage. Shrapnel, machine-gun, and rifle fire were poured into those advancing lines. It was terrible in its effectiveness. The French told us that they had never seen such marksmanship practiced in the heat of battle. If the German advance had looked beautiful to me, that metal curtain that our marines rang down on the scene was even more so.
> The German lines did not break; they were broken. The boches fell by the scores there among the wheat and the poppies.
> They hesitated, they halted, they withdrew a space. Then they came on again. They were brave men; we must grant them that. Three times they tried to reform and break through that barrage, but they had to stop at last. The United States marines had stopped them. Thus repulsed with heavy losses they retired, but our fire was relentless; it followed them to their death. They broke and ran for cover, though their first line hung on till dark, north of Champillon.
> It was a terrible slaughter; the mere thought of such wholesale killing is enough to curdle Christian blood. But we had whipped the Hun. We had turned that part of his advance into a

AMERICA SHAKING HANDS WITH ENGLAND

SHAKING HANDS WITH ENGLAND. By Charles Hanson Towne. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.

BRITISH-AMERICAN DISCORDS AND CONCORDS: A Record of Three Centuries. Compiled by The History Circle. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

MR. CHARLES HANSON TOWNE, editor of McClure's Magazine, was one of a group of American editors who last Summer visited England for the purpose of "shaking hands." The little book that he has written as a result of that trip is neither a diary nor a detailed record, but a collection of impressions, varied, vivid, significant. The bond between America and England is very close now. The old irritations and misunderstandings have been brushed aside or forgotten. The fundamental kinship between the two peoples is felt very poignantly, as something strong and great and enduringly vigorous. That it should not thus endure seems unthinkable to us now—and not the less must we welcome books such as these—Mr. Towne's little volume and this record compiled by The History Circle—to cement more firmly the bond.

Says Mr. Towne of the England he visited:

> It was a privilege to be in England and to see, at first hand, all that she has accomplished. She will not speak her own praises; therefore, we on the other side of the world must tell of her wonder in the days when sorrow stood at her door. England the Magnificent—in that way I shall always think of her now.

So he gives us bits of his trip to England, and of what he saw there. He tells us, for instance, just how Britain denied herself food that her ships might carry and convoy our soldiers overseas. He writes of the friendship and simple camaraderie of British and American sailors, and of the thoroughgoing fashion in which the two fleets joined hands in their great work—we must join our hands forever, he adds. And he writes, too, of things which we now know to be very English—though we have not always known that, just as we have not always known that endurance and continued dogged heroism was a characteristic of the French. Mr. Towne tells us how surprised he was when he dined in a great London restaurant to find everything so gay, the women so beautifully gowned, the atmosphere so pleasant and so like the days of peace—and then he tells us how he learned the reason for the gayety. These beautifully dressed women, with their laughter and their bright talk, were entertaining their husbands and sons and brothers on furlough from the front; there was scarcely a woman in the restaurant to whom the war had not brought poignant personal grief; but it was not their part to weep over that when the soldiers were at home; their task was to give them a happy time, a bright memory to carry away. And the men in evening dress, Mr. Towne learned, were soldiers, permitted by the British custom to wear mufti on leave. He says:

> For a brief interval they were being given a glimpse of the London life they missed and craved; and the women were determined that they would do their part to make the evening lovely. After all, we would go mad if we brooded on the horrors of the war every day. * * * And as I looked around the room I saw it with new eyes. I saw it as the soldier dead would like to have had it for their comrades who were left.

In telling of another incident, he writes:

> The English always smile at their own nobilities. You cannot beat a people like that. They simply will not be downed.
> These are the people who go without sugar and butter and milk gladly; and in the theatres, at the revues, there were always jokes about rations.

There is a brief record of a short visit to France in Mr. Towne's book, too, and a tribute to the French that matches that to the British. But it is of "shaking hands with England" that the book especially treats. And at the end the author says:

> The Anglo-American Alliance must come about. It is up to every American and every Britisher to see to it, to do his personal share in bringing about a closer relation between England and America.
> We have shaken hands cordially. Does that mean nothing?
> It means everything. It means enduring friendship, and the safety of the world.

The History Circle first met at the City Club of New York in May, 1917, to study and present in simple form past national and international experiences for such light as they may throw on present events and policies. The Circle's membership is restricted to American citizens, and comprises historians of authority, business men, editors, engineers, writers, and others. A committee of the members was at work for over a year in the preparation of this brief and vital monograph on Anglo-American relations—which constitutes, by the way, the first of a series. It is a book not only timely, but enduringly significant. At the conclusion of the volume the authors state:

> George Washington had the support not only of Americans but of the best minds in England * * * he not only founded the American Commonwealth of States, but the example he thus set showed Britain how to evolve the Britannic Commonwealth of Nations. He was not only "the Father of his Country," he was also "the Founder of the British Empire." Yet even this dual rôle gives him and his fellow-patriots but half their due, for they, more than any other group of men, accelerated the growth of modern democracy, English-speaking democracy, the democracy after which are fashioned all great modern democracies.
> Justice, therefore, requires that in America we give to Washington and his associates not merely the credit due them for their accomplishments in America, but that broader measure of credit accorded them by Britain for what they have done for all English-speaking peoples. And, simultaneously, we should give proper credit to the British origins of American democracy. * * *
> [illegible] and common duty such antecedents have transmitted to all the English-speaking peoples are clearer today than ever before * * *
> We see our need of the unity of the English-speaking peoples.

Different as they are, these two little volumes that point the same lesson may well be companion books.

NATIONAL HONOR

WHAT IS NATIONAL HONOR? By Leo Perla. With a special introduction by Norman Angell. $1.50.

PERHAPS the most interesting thing in this suggestive book is the "symposium" which Mr. Perla has gathered giving over 150 opinions on national honor culled from Aristotle to Colonel Roosevelt. It emerges clearly from these citations that the term has no universal application whatever, that its interpretation is local, vague, and contradictory. This is the precise reason why The Hague conferences have left its definition in obscurity.

It is because this phrase, "national honor," through the accrued meaning of centuries of bloodshed and suffering, has come to have a significance which stirs the emotions irrationally, without reference to practicality or ultimate justice, that it forms so deadly a slogan. The reaction to it is "direct," without the mediation of reason. Yet Mr. Perla is clear-eyed enough to see that the pacifists' propaganda to combat its influence has been essentially unsound, psychologically false. They have bent their efforts to proving that wars generally have an economic basis, and that they are economically wasteful, forgetting that though the causes of war may have been economic, the motives for which men fought them were as far removed from the cause as possible:

> The program in general of all pacifist propaganda has been based upon the erroneous assumption that the underlying reason for war, in fact the "only remaining obstacle to peace," is that men believe in the economic and other advantages of the military system, and that once this intellectual prop has been removed, men will no longer see any sense in fighting. This false view that men fight out of a finely calculated economic hedonism, out of intellectual persuasion of the advantages of war, has been the Achilles tendon of all pacifist technique.

The real reason has been an intangible sense of honor and, in disregarding this motive, the pacifists have ignored the dynamic, impelling force in mass psychology. Mr. Perla's book is an attempt to define this force. But he finds it impossible of definition; it is an emotion. Since it is an emotion capable of destructive and constructive uses it must be so defined and codified to render the discrepancies and contradictions to which it leads visible to the naked eye, to the man on the street. Mr. Perla's plea is for a court whose object it shall be to make national honor international, and to enlist in favor of this international code the sentiments that men now feel for the national. It is a stimulating and thoughtful book at once realistic and hopeful.

While Paris Laughed
Being Pranks and Passions of the Poet Tricotrin
By LEONARD MERRICK

Anyone who knew Paris when that laughing city was the world's playground will find here a delicately tinted portrait in miniature of the thing he loved—gay, brilliant Paris at play. The book's light inconsequence is extraordinarily skilful, exceedingly amusing. The escapades of the elegant, preposterous Tricotrin and his absurd companions are ridiculous in the extreme, but they are the effervescence of an irrepressible lightheartedness that is a gift of the gods. There is scarcely one novelist in a generation who can transfer it to print without dulling its sparkle. In these days there is only Leonard Merrick.

"Had Leonard Merrick been born in France his brilliancy, wit, pathos and keen insight into life would have made his name a household word no less than Alphonse Daudet."—The Nation.

MOTOR SHOW IN GARDEN AS TOURING DAYS RETURN

Outlook for Revival of Automobiling Throughout Country

Cars of Fifty-Eight Makes on Exhibit for a Week in Madison Square Garden and Sixty-Ninth Regiment Armory---One Brand New Model and Many Improvements

NEW YORK'S nineteenth automobile show, which will be in progress during the coming two weeks, is a remarkable object lesson of the stability of the industry and its prompt facilities for readjustment so quickly after the commercial restrictions of the war period. The managers of the show, with that optimism which is so characteristic of American business, have put on what is virtually a double-header, in that the exhibit will continue for two weeks and will be held in two buildings, the Madison Square Garden and the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, close by, on Lexington Avenue.

The first week will be devoted exclusively to passenger cars and the usual large variety of accessories which will be shown in both buildings. The second week, beginning Monday, Feb. 10, will be the commercial car exhibit of motor trucks and smaller delivery cars. This is a new departure for the New York show, as it is the first time that a distinct commercial car show, including a comprehensive variety of the leading makes, has ever been arranged in this city.

The signing of the armistice on Nov. 11 made the show possible. The manufacturers of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, under whose auspices the national shows in New York and Chicago have hitherto been held, very properly agreed, some time prior to the great allied drive which won the war for justice and humanity, to postpone the annual shows this year. With the sudden return to peaceful conditions the New York automobile dealers felt that they were justified in embarking upon the show venture. The same position was taken by the dealers of Chicago, so that the two big annual shows, with all of their national prestige and many novel features added, are now being held in both cities.

The manufacturers, notwithstanding the great disruption of nearly all of the plants, due to making munitions of war, have contributed royally in making the shows a success. Visitors to the passenger car show this week will find very little lacking as a result of the war's curtailment in factory production. With fifty-eight different makes of cars, including all of the popular ones, representing well over 100 types of bodies, from the snappy roadster to the luxurious sedans and limousines, there will be quite enough to hold the interest of the most exacting motorist on the qui vive for novelties and refined improvements.

The new things of the show will be chiefly in details, but it is improvements of this character both in neatness of body design and greater ease and reliability of engine and machine construction that make the strongest appeal to the individual owner who is his own mechanic either by choice or necessity. The war has had the effect of making thousands of owners fairly expert mechanics, and their knowledge of cars, naturally leaning to those of the greatest simplicity, is destined to exert considerable influence upon designers in making the motors, gears, brakes and other parts readily available for repairs outside of the service station.

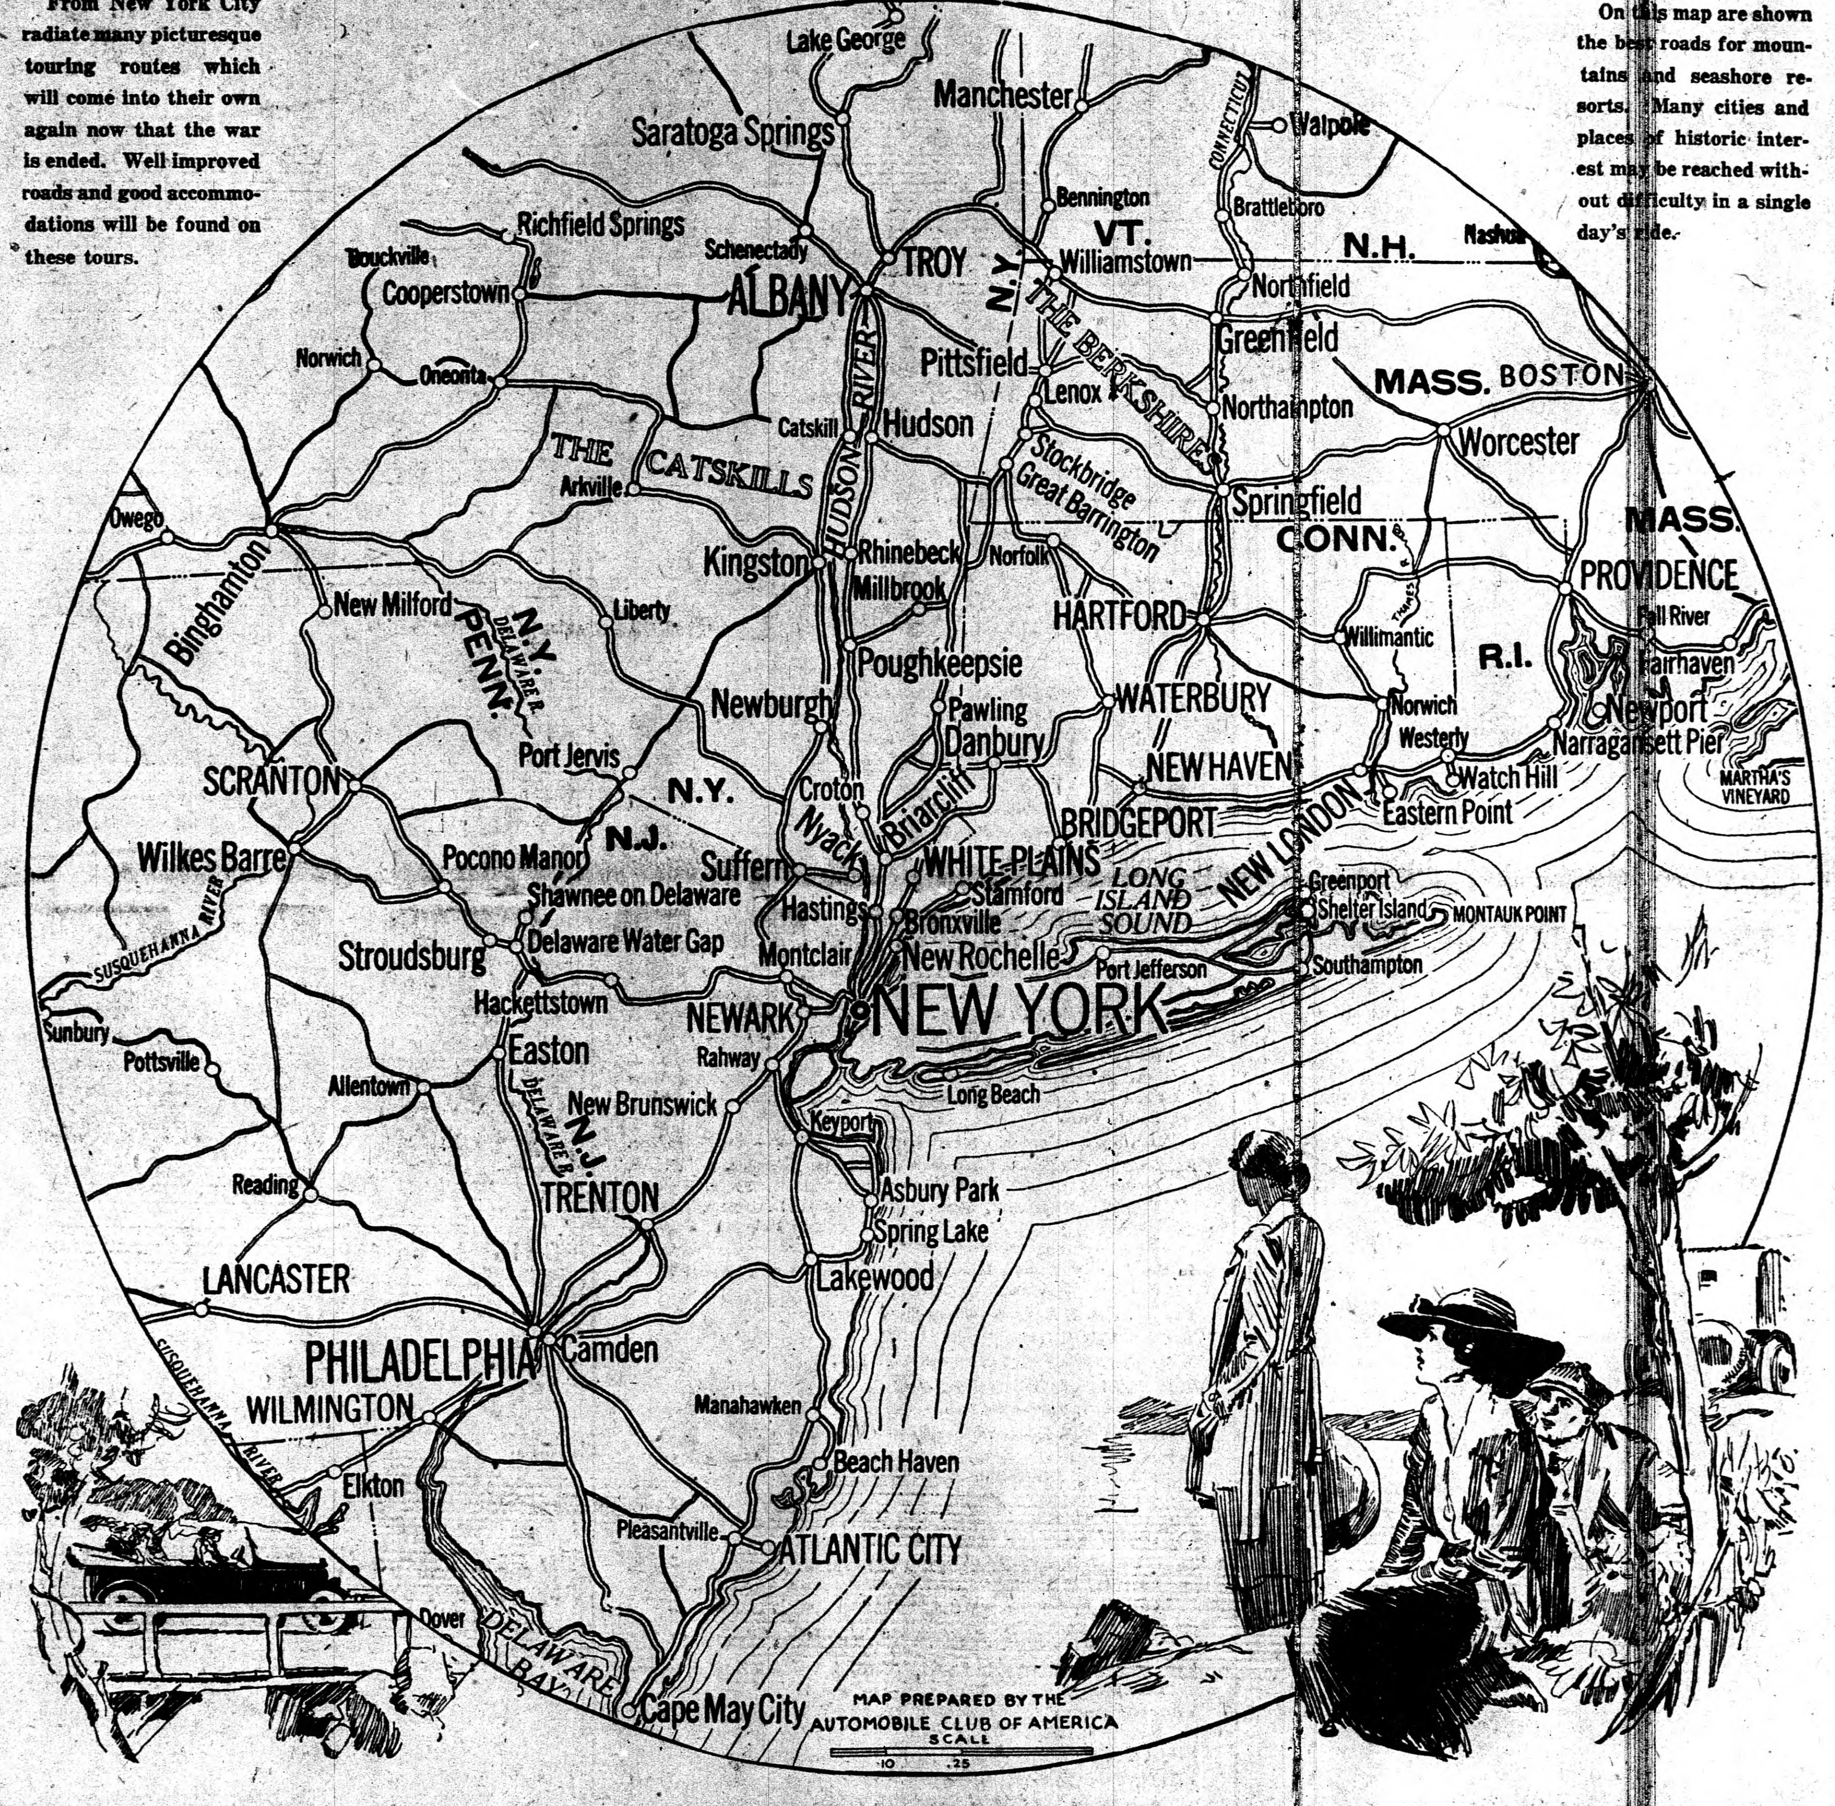
The six-cylinder motor will be the predominating type this year. The four-cylinder type will still be found popular, especially in many of the medium priced roadsters and small touring cars, and there will be about the usual number of eights and twelves, two or three manufacturers making types of six and twelve cylinder models for the same sized chassis. Braking systems will be found to be much improved and this also holds true with the wiring system, spring suspension and better accessibility in getting at the more intricate parts of the mechanism. There is also a tendency toward greater weight reduction and more is likely to be accomplished in this respect during the year. The adoption of overhead valves, successfully installed on several cars during the last two years, is growing in favor and next season will undoubtedly see a larger proportion of cars so equipped.

The prices of cars which have shown a tendency to slight reductions in some makes since the cessation of hostilities, are not yet on a level with pre-war conditions, and the prevailing impression is that no radical changes in price will be made during the year. Take it all in all the price of reliable cars is about as cheap as it is possible to produce them and owners are getting a machine of higher quality and better workmanship than was possible four or five years ago.

It will take some time for the industry to get back to normal peace conditions, and the full productive ability of the larger factories will not be entirely achieved for perhaps six months. The demand has shown a steady increase since the first of the year.

From New York City radiate many picturesque touring routes which will come into their own again now that the war is ended. Well improved roads and good accommodations will be found on these tours.

On this map are shown the best roads for mountains and seashore resorts. Many cities and places of historic interest may be reached without difficulty in a single day's ride.



ALL indications point to the coming season as being the greatest automobile touring year since the advent of the motor vehicle made it possible to travel for pleasure and healthful recreation to the picturesque sections of our country. Nothing, perhaps, has done so much to stimulate a real love for the country and to broaden the education of thousands of persons into America's historic and scenic localities as the automobile. The reasonable price at which serviceable cars can be bought, large enough to carry the entire family, has been another stimulus to healthful country outings, and the fact that nearly 6,000,000 automobiles are now in use in the United States is a convincing object lesson of the fact that a large part of the population has found both comfort and service in the motor car.

Another marked benefit to the country and which has directly contributed to greater touring possibilities is the impetus that the automobile has given to good roads. The automobile and good roads are so closely associated that one can hardly exist without the other, and one of the great lessons of the war now arousing keen interest in all parts of the country is the demand for well improved through highways making far distant points as accessible by motor traffic as places nearer at hand in more local communities.

The wider use of the motor vehicle for commercial transportation has brought this need of good roads out in sharper relief than ever before, and a new era of road building seems to be dawning for the country. During the war period many of the good road areas suffered severely, but these conditions are now being readjusted.

New York City may well claim to be one of the most favored, if not the greatest, touring centre in the world. Good roads lead from the metropolis to every possible variety of picturesque country, affording a constant succession of scenic joys to the motorist who has learned the gentle art of driving slowly enough to appreciate the old-fashioned but ever new beauties of nature.

A brief survey of the accompanying map, prepared by the Automobile Club of America, showing the main touring routes which may be taken for a single day's outing or for the week-end, with a new route coming home, shows at a glance how centrally located is the City of New York to reach from almost any angle pleasant places from 50 to 100 miles and more away with little difficulty. Lovers of the seashore have the broad expanse of the Atlantic along the Jersey coast with its popular resorts. Long Island, along its picturesque north shore, abounding with palatial homes, offers quieter but equally as attractive water scenes, and the south shore, washed by the Great South and Shinnecock Bays, has countless attractions for the motor tourist.

Running northward from the city to Westchester County some of the most charming scenery in the East will be found among the rolling hills and cultivated farms in and around the Croton watershed. This is one of the most popular touring regions in the vicinity of New York. There are in Westchester, Putnam, and Dutchess Counties between 3,000 and 4,000 miles of hard surfaced road all worthy of touring discovery. The views presented by the verdure-clad hills and dales of the Hudson and Harlem valleys and the watershed area never grow monotonous, for the tourist who loves the country will find some new aspect of beauty revealed with every change in the route. For a single day's touring these districts offer everything that a healthful day's outing could demand.

Across the Hudson in New Jersey the motorist will find another splendid variety of touring beauties, of which one of the most picturesque is that among the Ramapo and Tuxedo hills in the northern part of the State, thence crossing the border and traveling through the Harriman Park section of the Interstate Park system to Bear Mountain, with its glorious views over the Hudson and the heights of Stony Point just to the north. Another pleasant tour is more directly westward to the Pompton Lakes, leading to good roads across the State to the far-famous Delaware Water Gap.

There is a physical and mental relaxation in automobile touring through pleasant country at a moderate speed that cannot be found in any other mode of travel. With the close of the war many of those who were in the service or engaged in more serious duties are preparing to take their former week-end outings and longer vacations as before the war. Many old cars will be replaced with new models, the cars in storage will be overhauled, and motor touring for the comforts that it provides seems destined to be the most popular recreation hobby of the coming season.

Figures Show Motor Production and Curtailment Due to the War

The figures below present an interesting object lesson of the war's effect upon the automobile industry and the passenger car curtailment due to the request of the Government that the manufacturers put their factories on a 100 per cent. war basis.

Passenger car production was more than 800,000 cars short of 1917, being only 58 per cent. of that year, while the truck production increased from 128,157 to 227,251, or 76 per cent.

Automobile manufacturers are now returning to normal production, which will require several months' time, and it may be that this year's production may not equal the 1917 mark. There are now almost 6,000,000 motor vehicles registered in the United States.

What the Motor Car Industry Did to Aid the Government's War Work

The automobile industry has suffered substantially in the making of its normal products during the last year. In some instances passenger car makers were almost 100 per cent. on war materials when the armistice was signed, and have had considerable difficulty in getting back to a peace basis. Contracts were taken not alone for cars and trucks, but for guns, mine anchors, depth bombs, helmets, field kitchens, airplane motors, tanks, tractors, shells, and other material which could be made by the modern equipment of the motor car plants.

The following statistics from April, 1917, to December, 1918, tell something of the patriotic response made by the manufacturers to supply necessary motor material for the needs of the Government in the efficient conduct of the war.

Public appreciation is the most potent factor influencing the demand for Overland cars today. The confidence buyers have when ordering new Overland cars is the result of the esteem of 600,000 owners. This condition has its source in our original policy of placing owner-respect above all other considerations. This policy, to which we have adhered for ten years, has built the vast Willys-Overland factories totaling more than 120 acres. While our factories were giving precedence to war work we were enabled to devote painstaking, deliberate study and planning to the cars we now are marketing. We are in an even better position today to merit that public appreciation, on which the prestige of Overland and Willys-Knight cars is built.

6,000,000 MOTOR CARS IN UNITED STATES

Essential Value of Automobile Shown by Increase of Over 1,000,000, Despite Low Production

Practically 6,000,000 motor vehicles were in use in the United States by the first of the year, as revealed by the automobile registration in the various States. The actual total, according to the latest figures, was 5,945,442 vehicles. On Jan. 1, 1918, statistics showed that this country had a trifle less than 5,000,000—4,941,276 to be exact, so that the increase during the last year, despite the war conditions, higher prices and the storage of many cars, was 1,004,176 vehicles. This, in itself, is a remarkable indication of national economic strength under the many financial and personal war burdens.

Increase in automobile registration is an evidence of a growing modernisation of conditions and of the degree in which the wealth of the population is growing. Therefore, automobile statistics have come to be considered during recent years somewhat like iron and steel reports, and if closely studied they reveal even more interesting facts than these metallurgical statistics.

Automobile registration in the United States during the war showed a gain, the rate of which rose until 1916 and then decreased, as follows: 1914, 40 per cent.; 1915, 38 per cent.; 1916, 50 per cent.; 1917, 39 per cent., and 1918, 20 per cent.

An unparalleled rise in the cost of living, together with a series of loans more stupendous than anything ever dreamed of in the history of finance, explains why the rates of increase fell after 1916. It is safe to say that during the war very few automobiles were acquired as a matter of luxury—though many taxation experts were inclined to lean to that theory. Actual facts would probably show that the use of many passenger cars as a luxury was given up by their owners during 1917 and 1918, so that the motor vehicle actually gained immeasurably in importance as an essential and necessary means of conveyance.

Eighteen States now show a registration in excess of 100,000. New York still leads, the latest figures from Secretary of State Hugo giving the State a total motor registration of 463,000. Ohio is a close second, having passed the 400,000 mark during the year. Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Iowa have between 300,000 and 400,000; California, Michigan, Texas, Indiana and Minnesota, between 200,000 and 300,000, and Wisconsin, Kansas, Missouri, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Jersey, Oklahoma, and Washington between 100,000 and 200,000 vehicles. Thus, five States in the West, eight in the Middle West, and one in the Southwest are ranged with four Eastern States as leading users of automobiles.

Reference to the registration figures of these States opens up the interesting question whether country or city affords the better market for the automobile trade. As against the argument that industry is so much more profitable than agriculture, how can this evidence of wealth on the part of our farmers be explained. For, whether the cars be used for business or pleasure, they must be bought and paid for in cash. Thus, many a young fellow ambitious of acquiring and owning an automobile would realize his dreams more easily by taking to the country.

Using the automobile registration statistics as an indicator of sectional wealth, it is interesting to note that two agricultural States, Iowa and Nebraska, have one motor vehicle to every seven State inhabitants. South Dakota, Kansas, Montana, California, North Dakota, Arizona, Michigan, and Minnesota come next in order, with proportionate percentages of 9 to 12, and most of them are agricultural. The District of Columbia has a car to every 9 of the population, but it occupied a unique position during the war owing to the increased importance of the national capital.

State registration increase in per cent. is also an interesting angle of our records. During the first eleven months of 1918 the District of Columbia's registration increased 89 per cent., while the other leading States made the following showing: South Carolina, 50 per cent.; New Jersey, 48 per cent.; Arkansas, 44 per cent.; Georgia, 41 per cent.; Alabama, 40 per cent.; Maryland, 39 per cent.; Kentucky, 39 per cent.; Oregon, 38 per cent.; Wyoming, 33 per cent.; Idaho, 31 per cent.

The only one of these States with a registration of more than 100,000 machines is New Jersey. Incidentally, most of these States are not among the most progressive ones of the country. The reason for their enormous gain in registration is probably to be sought in the increase of their wealth due to military camps located in their borders, as there were important cantonments in practically every one of them. On the other hand, the ratio of vehicles to population has not improved nearly so much in the States which lead in absolute registration. Their increased registration, however, represents a permanent increase of wealth, not a mere form of war prosperity, as the gains of the dozen States just mentioned.

The automobile situation in America may be summed up as follows:

The demands of the world war stimulated our manufacturing capacity;

America's entrance into the war reduced the use of automobiles as a luxury, but increased it as a practical necessity;

A strong healthy gain in motor vehicles was registered by those States which, industrially or agriculturally, contributed most to the conduct of the war and its financing;

Sporadic and spectacular gains were made in territories affording extra large war profits due to proximity of camps;

While the use of unnecessary machines in cities decreased (relatively) during the war, the big farming sections came to look on the motor vehicle as the means of introducing modern efficiency and comfort into their work and life, until such States as Iowa and Nebraska own practically a car per family.

It may be safely stated that the automobile business is certainly not suffering from any kind of inflation or wartime superprosperity, but is entering the period of peace on a healthy basis, facing millions of sensible users and prospective users of cars. The car has simply hastened an evolution whereby the automobile is bound to become an absolute necessity in the household of the nation, as the railroad and the telephone have already become in the past.

Auto Census by Counties.

The office of the Secretary of State at Albany is now engaged in preparing statistics which will show the proportion of cars to population in both the urban and rural districts. Each February Mr. Hugo's office issues a list giving the registration of cars and chauffeurs by counties. There is generally a heavy demand for this information from individual motorists and manufacturers. The list can be obtained from Mr. Hugo's office by February 15.

LINCOLN HIGHWAY WORK.

Nearly $3,000,000 Spent in National Improvements Last Year.

F. A. Seiberling was elected President for the second year of the Lincoln Highway Association at the recent annual meeting of the association in Detroit. The Vice Presidents chosen were Henry B. Joy, R. D. Chopin, Carl G. Fisher, and A. F. Bement, the latter being also Secretary. H. C. Ostermann was re-elected Field Secretary. Mr. Joy was President for four years until his resignation Jan. 1, 1918, to enter war service.

Attention was called by Mr. Seiberling to the awakened interest in good highways and to the hearty approval in both Pennsylvania and Illinois by the voters in providing for bond issues aggregating $110,000,000 for State highways. He added that the Lincoln Highway Association was taking care of the situation in Western States, where finances were inadequate to meet their own problems, and that two years more would practically see the elimination of the poor sections in Wyoming, Utah, and Nevada.

Field Secretary H. C. Ostermann and Secretary A. F. Bement brought out that $2,996,307.77 had been spent on the improvement of the highway during 1918 even in the face of the manifold difficulties presented by the war situation, an amount greater than expended in 1917, and which brought the total funds expended upon the highway improvement since the organization of the association to $15,065,392.71.

"With the completion of many improvement plans," said Mr. Seiberling, "which have been awaiting only the ending of the war for their realization, you will see a completed transcontinental highway from New York to San Francisco, marked for every foot of its distance, free to lawful traffic of all descriptions, improved in such a measure as to enable transcontinental freight transportation on a definite schedule in all weathers, and we hope by that time under the supervision of the Federal Government and with its continued improvement, maintenance, and beautification assured forever through adequate appropriations."

In addition to the officers, the Directors of the association for the coming year are: Russell A. Alger, James A. Allison, Albert J. Beveridge, Henry F. Campbell, Paul H. Deming, A. Y. Gowen, Alvan Macauley, and John N. Willys.

Buick

BUICK REPUTATION STANDS SUPREME

No other motor car has ever attained so good a reputation. For years the Buick Motor Company has been the world's largest builders of six cylinder automobiles. Buick new cars sell more readily than any other make—Buick used cars are harder to find and bring the highest prices. Automobile owners, automobile merchants and everybody everywhere know Buicks as the best cars of their respective prices.

BUICK VALVE-IN-HEAD MOTORS HAVE COMPLETELY TRIUMPHED

Luck, chance or advertising never made the Buick famous. In the last fifteen years over 500,000 Buick Valve-in-Head Motor Cars have, without exception, been more reliable and developed greater power and speed on less fuel than any other motors of equal size. Aeroplanes and submarines, where the slightest motor mistakes invite destruction, universally use valve-in-head motors for the same reasons. Buick Valve-in-Head Motor Cars have and will run 10,000 miles or 100,000 miles over hills or any roads with more certainty and on less fuel than any other motor cars that receive the same care. A BUICK HOLDS THE WORLD'S GREATEST MILEAGE RECORD—302,000 MILES.

THE GREAT BUICK PLANT HELPED WIN THE WORLD WAR

Buick valve-in-head tanks, Buick built valve-in-head Liberty Motors, Buick valve-in-head ambulances, Buick valve-in-head passenger cars and hundreds of thousands of Buick shells helped put the Hun on the run. The entire automobile industry pulled together and whether one built cotter pins or tanks, the size and experience of the industry, its readiness and efficiency very materially helped win the war.

BUICK FACTS THAT PLEASE CUSTOMERS

Buick cars are being built again in great quantities. Buick cars are guaranteed for one year—few motor cars are guaranteed over ninety days. The experience we have gained while building up the largest motor car retail business in New York and our Branch House Stock Rooms and Service has pleased thousands of Buick customers. This FIRST PLACE CAR and service are worth your FIRST PLACE consideration.

KISSEL

The Part Kissel Will Play in 1919—

OUR faces are now turned toward the ideals of Peacetime—of serving the American people with the same loyalty that we served the American Government—incorporating in the new Kissel Custom-Built Models, Peacetime efficiency, plus Wartime economy.

We will concentrate on one passenger car chassis only—the new Kissel custom-built chassis, with the new custom-built motor 3 5/16 x 5½—representing the culmination of thirteen years of engineering achievements and innovation triumphs—in two exclusive body designs, encompassing those unique and distinctive features that characterize the custom-built job.

As You Would Build It

In the new Custom-Built Models Kissel has produced a strictly custom-built car, combining in one model all the chassis and body features which the motor car connoisseur would demand if he himself were designing a car for his own use.

In addition we build the new 7-passenger Touring Car, with all the vital custom-built features that characterize the more expensive cars, striking a new note in motor car design and mechanical excellence, sold at a moderate price.

The new ALL-YEAR models will be built in two or three types, mounted on the new Kissel custom-built chassis. The Kissel Line of Motor Trucks, equipped with the ALL-YEAR Cab, will be augmented by the new ¾-ton model, the "General Delivery."

For the benefit of those men and women whose motor car judgment is that of a connoisseur we are displaying the new Kissel Custom-Built Silver Specials at Madison Square Garden this week.

Kissel factory officials with headquarters at Knickerbocker Hotel are in attendance for the benefit of those visiting automobile dealers whose clientele demands the custom-built motor car.

JORDAN

The Final Proof of Jordan Success

IF A MAN decides to paint a picture, write a book, make a pair of shoes, or build a motor car, and he determines to put into that product of his own brain the best that he has within him, that creation will possess a certain quality of goodness—an expression of his own sincerity, which will command attention, create desire, and secure the approval of people who know what they want.

Gentlemen:-

Relative to the recent purchase made by me of a Jordan Sport Model car, I beg to advise you that up to the present time it has given all the service that a most satisfactory car could give. Of course I had been familiar with the car sometime prior to my purchasing it, and knew that it was a "real car" and am glad to give my hearty endorsement of the car to and shall in the future, as I have in the past, be pleased to recommend it to any one.

Yours very truly,

Gentlemen:

As an owner of a Jordan Car I take a great deal of pleasure in telling you what I think about it.

I have had the car for over a year and have not touched it with the exception of putting gasoline and oil and water into the machine, and have not even had a punctured tire. I dont know what some people get out of their cars, but I never figured that I could get anything any better than this.

The car has answered every requirement and has not caused me any trouble. In fact I am surprised at times that it has not caused me trouble because of the lack of attention which I have given it. I believe the car is running as well now, or even better than it did when I first bought it.

With best wishes, I remain

Gentlemen:

While I have had my Jordan but a few months, having gone about 25,000 miles, the economy in gasoline is very satisfactory and the motor is very quiet and flexible.

Most of my driving has been through and over the Schooleys Mountains in Jersey and other hilly territory, and the Jordan gives a better performance than any other car which I have ever operated. Recently, my 7-passenger car carried eight people and several hundred pounds of baggage directly through the heart of the Schooleys Mountains up into the Delaware Watergap region. It is rather remarkable under these conditions that I took all hills in high gear. It was not necessary to crowd the motor at any time.

If you ever want to use me as a reference, I will be glad to co-operate with you.

HUNTING BY MOTOR GROWING POPULAR

Imperils Game Conditions, Says Commissioner Pratt, Although of Advantage to Sportsmen

By GEORGE D. PRATT,
Conservation Commissioner, New York State.

Extensive use of motor cars by hunters and fishermen, while of tremendous advantage to sportsmen, is opening up serious new problems for the conservationist. In the old days it was an important outing and a big undertaking for a party of hunters to make a trip into the woods where game could be found. It entailed the packing of tent and other camping equipment, and usually meant a stay of a week or more in one spot in order to make the extensive preparations worth while. Now a party of hunters with their guns can climb into an automobile before dawn, drive fifty or sixty miles into the woods, and perhaps have a deer before breakfast. Furthermore, through the medium of the motor car, vast stretches of the remoter forests, which formerly acted more or less in the capacity of sanctuaries for the preservation of a breeding stock of game, have been thrown open to the hunter.

The number of automobiles now used by sportsmen can only be appreciated by one who has counted the cars on one of the main highways leading into some such famous hunting ground as the Adirondack Mountains. In the open season a constant stream passes along such highways filled with men whose costume is unmistakably that of the hunter. Were we to follow these cars on their way we should find them stopping at favorite hunting grounds, sometimes halting at the cabin of a guide and some drawn up along the roadside at the edge of the wood.

It is not only the privileged hunter of big game who makes use of the automobile for sport; the rabbit hunter or the partridge hunter, equally with the deer hunter, now relies upon his car to carry him to the hunting ground. In this way the motor car is innocently responsible for the killing of more game than was possible before its advent. In those days the hunter and his dog would tramp from the village in the morning and would tramp back at night without having covered more than ten or twelve miles of territory. Nowadays, half a dozen village sportsmen and their dogs will get aboard the faithful "bus" and whizz away to a distant cover where partridges are known to abound. In a comparatively short time they can "draw" this cover and be back again at the car ready to be carried another ten or twenty miles, if necessary, to fresh fields.

In just the same way, the fisherman can enjoy his sport throughout a much wider area, as a result of the assistance he gets from his automobile. In the old days, he would drive to some farm house upon the bank of his favorite stream where he would tie his horse in the barn and go forth to spend the balance of the day wading through pools and rapids. But now he can go three times as far, if he wishes, before he even starts to fish, and then, if results are not what he thinks they might be, he has merely to start up his car and be off to whip another stream.

Then there is the illegal hunter or willful violator of the game laws who uses the automobile either as an accessory or to help him escape the punishment of the law. The "jacking" of deer upon highways at night by means of automobile headlights has come to be a very serious question where deer abound. If, in forested regions, a deer happens to be crossing the road as an automobile approaches, he becomes dazzled by the light and stands motionless in his tracks. In spite of the fact that both jacking deer and shooting on highways are contrary to law, there is many a game-hog who will slaughter the motionless deer. According to the testimony of game protectors, many a carcass of deer illegally killed has been smuggled away from the camps in trunks on motor cars.

All of these facts have developed new problems in the conservation of the State's wild life resources. Indirectly the automobile has necessitated redoubled efforts of game protection and propagation, in order that our woods and waters may continue to yield their quota of sport and food.

HIGH POWERED LIGHT ROADSTER.
The Chevrolet Four-Cylinder "Ninety" Light Touring Car, 102-Inch Wheelbase.

Strong Bridges for Safe Traffic.

The limiting factor in a great many roads extensively used has been antique bridges built in the days when light buggy traffic was the rule. Gradually the State Departments are overcoming this handicap to travel by replacing the structures by solid, concrete spans. In 1917, $47,290,796 was expended in this way in the United States.

BE CAREFUL OF TIRES.

Operators Warned Against Driving Trucks at Excessive Speeds.

A word of caution against running truck tires at excessive speed is given by the manager of a large rubber company.

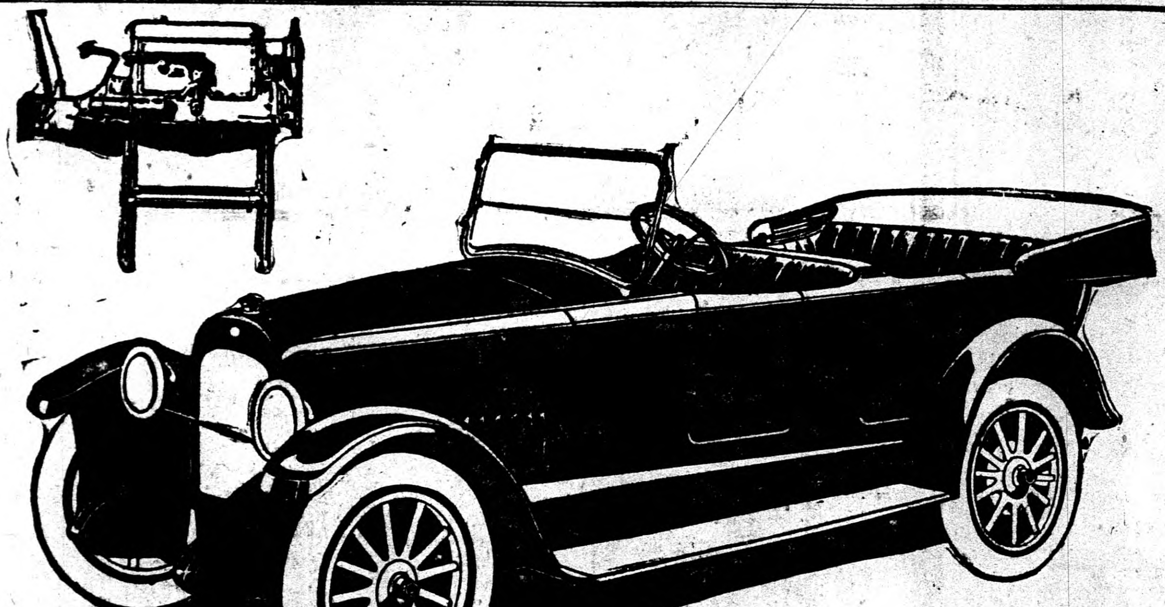
"There is no form of truck tire abuse which is more expensive than speeding," he says. "If a man set out to ruin a set of truck tires, he could not find a quicker way than to run the truck, heavily loaded, at excessive speed. This is a sure way to destroy tires, and yet it is constantly done.

"In the first place, there is the danger that the centrifugal force in a swift moving tire will tear the soft rubber from its base, and generate a heat that will cause the rubber to deteriorate. No matter how great the cushioning qualities of the rubber, the tire does not have time to accommodate itself to the irregularities of the road, and the destructive jolting caused will be very costly. An expensive truck can very soon be jarred out of commission by speeding.

"The effect is the same as running over rough roads, for speeding magnifies every irregularity. The tires absorb the shocks when the truck is operated at the recommended rate of speed, but increasing the speed greatly increases the force of the shocks."

Good Roads Help Schools.

A survey made by the Government of the effects of good road building on school attendance in eight counties shows that before the roads were improved the average school attendance was 66 pupils to each 100 enrolled, as compared with 76 after the roads were improved.



THE marked interest shown by the crowds which yesterday inspected our exhibit at the show, is but an illustration of the high regard of the public for the Nash Six with Perfected Valve-in-Head motor wherever it is in service throughout the country. Its unusual power, economy and quietness place it in the front rank of America's leading motor car values.

300,000 Builders of Good Will

In four years Dodge Brothers have supplied to the American people, and to American soldiers, more than three hundred thousand of their cars.

The demand for the car is just as fresh, and just as vigorous, today, as in the first year of its existence.

The simple truth is, indeed, that the war has given a new interest and a new impetus to that demand.

To the natural and normal preference which the American people always accord a product which wins their good will, has been added a strong sentimental attraction.

The car is inseparably linked, in the thought of thousands of homes, with its fine and faithful performance in the service of the nation.

The written and spoken word of American army men, at home and abroad, has given the very name of Dodge Brothers Motor Car a new and a stirring significance.

It stands, in their minds and hearts, as a synonym for pluck, and endurance, and ability to 'carry on' under the stress of desperately discouraging conditions.

So the war that curtailed production of the car, has now conferred upon it a stronger and more spontaneous admiration than ever.

More than ever is it apparent, now that the American people think of it as a stable and an established value, to be bought on its merits, and without a moment's hesitation.

Thus that national good will which has become almost a trade mark in Dodge Brothers business, after four years, is at the highest point in their history.

Dodge Brothers enter upon the fifth year with a full sense of the confidence reposed in them and the determination to continue to deserve it.

EW YORK LEADS WITH 463,000 CARS

Still the Empire State in Automobile Use---Trucks Show Largest Proportionate Increase

By FRANCIS M. HUGO,
Secretary of State, New York.

total of 463,561 motor cars, includ- commercial vehicles, were registered New York State the past year, a gain per cent. over 1917. Passenger cars an 8 per cent. increase and com- cial cars a 34 per cent. increase. are the figures up to Jan. 18, and be slightly augmented before Feb. that being the date on which New State's automobile year begins. A of 28,583 motorcycles were reg- red during the year, a decrease of over 1917.

he registration of cars and the licens- of chauffeurs, operators and dealers ught a revenue to the State during of $4,946,978. Compared with 1917, is an increase of $662,864 in revenue 31,994 in motor vehicles.

f the total number of cars registered year, New York City, including all its oughs, has 137,708 cars, or about one- rd of all the cars in the State. The rease in cars in the city last year ounted to 12,607 and from indications the present registration there will be heavy increase during the coming onth. The year saw a decrease of 67 alers in New York City.

It is reasonably safe to predict that the close of the present year New rk State will have 550,000 to 575,000 rs in use. I believe that 1919 will be the eat motor year in the State's his- y.

The increase in motor trucks last year passed expectations, furnishing a endid testimonial of the usefulness of truck to the commercial and busi- world and its adaptability and ibility to present day needs. During twelve months approximately 20,000 more trucks came into use in this State, and of that number practically 6,500 were in New York City. The figures show that motor trucks are being used generally throughout the State, and that the past year's increase has not been confined in any way to the larger cities, but has been a general one.

The registration figures for New York City up to Jan. 1, 1919, and for the State up to Jan. 18, are:

There is now an automobile for every twenty persons in the State. Three years ago there was a car to every thirty-one residents. Since then the ratio of car to population has steadily grown better, and while New York State, as yet, does not equal several other States in the proportion of cars to population, it should be borne in mind that there are thousands of persons in the State, especially in the congested areas of New York City, who never hope to own a car.

This year is no exception to the last two or three in an insistent demand for registration plates containing low numbers or numerals corresponding to house on business address, or to some event which stands forth prominently in the life of the motorist.

The marvelous growth of the motor vehicle in New York State is shown from the records in the Secretary of State's office. The figures below show the registration of owners, chauffeurs, and receipts for the last eighteen years:

Many persons ask for numbers which correspond with their home addresses, while others want automobile numbers corresponding with their telephone numerals. One man went so far as to ask for a number the same as the year when he secured his divorce, and it so happened that the number could be supplied.

More women were licensed as chauffeurs in the State last year than ever before. The women showed a thorough knowledge of their cars, and the majority stated their intention of driving in connection with various motor corps units organized for home war service. Others wanted licenses to replace men who had been called in the service. While detailed records are not yet available as to the number of licensed women drivers, a conservative estimate would be about 4,000.

Motor Registration Revenue.

The total gross motor vehicle registration and license revenues for 1917 were $37,501,237.01. Of this sum $23,235,897.82 was available for road work by or under the several State departments, $11,452,705.93 under the direction of local authorities, and the remainder was diverted in other departments of Government.

AIR PRESSURE FOR TIRES.

Should Be the Same for All Seasons —Proper Inflation Important.

Tire air pressure should remain the same Winter and Summer, says the manager of a tire company.

"Many car owners labor under a false impression regarding the tire pressure," he adds. "Tires should not be pumped up harder in the Winter months. Likewise pressure should not be reduced in Summer because decreases cause the tire to bend more, create more friction and naturally to generate heat. Motorists are inclined to make a complicated matter of inflation. While too little pressure is extremely important and is undoubtedly the biggest abuse tires are put to, determining the proper air pressure for tires is really a simple matter.

"A tire gauge is not absolutely necessary. Just stand in front or rear of your car and observe that the tires are full and round, that they do not sag noticeably under the weight of the car. Proper inflation is so important that no chances should be taken. At all times the tire should receive the benefit of the doubt."

The Show's Only New Car—The Essex

New in Name and Type—Expected for Two Years

Has Special Position at the Show

Not Room for It and the Hudson on the Main Floor of Madison Square Garden, They Are Given the Largest Space in the Building, in the Concert Hall on the Second Floor

Everyone who goes to the Automobile Show will want to see the Essex, the only new car of the year.

Thousands have seen and ridden in it in New York since it was first shown two weeks ago. No space available on the first floor of Madison Square Garden could accommodate the crowds who would want to see it.

We were given the largest exhibiting space in the building for Essex and the Hudson.

Four Essex cars will make examination easy. If only one were shown thousands would be disappointed.

Has Economy of the Light Car, Comfort and Endurance of the Costliest

The Essex combines the wanted qualities of the two most distinct types of cars.

It has the economy and moderate first cost of the light car. And it has the performance, refinement and richness, the sturdiness and comfort of the large, costly car.

It is receiving the praise of all who have seen and ridden in it. Men who can afford only the cheap cars but who appreciate the finer qualities that appeal to pride of ownership hail the Essex as one to be proud of.

They speak of its performance as they do of large, costly cars. Even those who can afford such cars are saying good words for the Essex. They are among the most enthusiastic admirers of the Essex, for it meets their ideals.

The Essex has many new mechanical improvements. It is replete in all details that make a car so desirable from the standpoint of comfort, sturdiness and performance.

You Should Not Only See It—You Should Ride in the Essex

You will be able to understand only half of its attractions if you don't ride in the Essex. We have demonstrating cars just outside the Garden. When you are in the Concert Hall, tell the attendant you would like a ride. He will arrange a demonstration that will reveal riding comfort and performance such as you have never seen in a car of its weight, economy or cost.

In making those statements we are merely repeating what everyone who has seen and ridden in the Essex is saying.

Don't forget the location of the Essex and Hudson exhibits. Take the stairway located at either the right or left of the main entrance and go to the Concert Hall. You will miss the most interesting exhibit in the show if you don't do that.

As the crowd flows through the Auto Show, it's only about twice in an hour that the different sort of buyer comes along. He is the man who makes more than surface discriminations. He is very positive as to what he wants in a motor car—and his examination of the car itself reveals definitely whether those values are there.

That man, when he reads this advertisement, seizes upon the claim that Westcott is the car with a longer life; and he makes this mental note: "Too important to pass by—I'll see the Westcott! If it's got the stuff in it, I'll know—and if in addition it has lines and comfort, it goes straight to the head of my list."

If you're either a buyer or a dealer who thinks along that line, we'll be mighty glad to see you at the Westcott display.

SPORT MODEL

A Powerful Car

WHEN you see the new Standard "8" Sport Model with its long, narrow body, its low center of gravity, its long, straight hood which conceals its eight-cylinder, 83 horse-power motor, you get an advance impression of the thrill that awaits you when you let in the clutch for the first time.

83 horse-power with 8-cylinder flexibility, 127-inch wheel base and light weight give to the motorist an idea of the possibilities of this car.

A demonstration will show even greater performance than your expectations.

When you drive in traffic, never shifting a gear or never slipping the clutch, you will realize its unusual flexibility.

It is only when you try the hardest hills on high wi straining the motor in the slightest degree that you can bel its wonderful hill-climbing ability.

The name "Sport Car" describes this new Standard "8". It is a sport car from its trim, supple lines to its snappy, eager performance.

The Standard "8" is built by the sixth largest industrial institution in the world—The Standard Steel Car Company of Pittsburgh—makers of world famous railroad rolling stock.

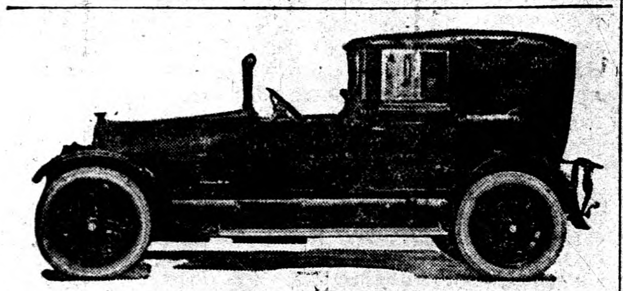
USE BEST GASOLINE IN PASSENGER CARS

Proper Motor Fuel Must Give Efficiency and Economy---Differences in Grades Explained

By DONALD McLEOD LAY.

Although the war is virtually over and gasless Sundays have contributed an interesting chapter to the ancient history of American motoring, patriotic owners will not readily forget the lessons of economy and the efforts to obtain maximum efficiency accentuated in so many ways under war conditions. It may be timely, therefore, to point out the most important factor in the situation—the character and quality of the gasoline.

On stopping to think the matter over, it is not difficult to realize that it makes a very great difference in the amount of fuel consumed by any motor car if the combustion which takes place in the cylinders is not complete. It means that a large proportion of the driving energy, or power, contained in an inferior grade of motor fuel, which, by the way, is usually unbranded, is not utilized, but goes to waste. Instead of aiding in operating the car, the imperfectly vaporized, unburned portion simply increases the severity of the wear and tear on the mechanism. It forms carbon deposits on the valves and in the combustion chambers and, in liquid form, penetrates to the crankcase, where it increases friction and reduces power by "cutting" the protecting film of lubricating oil away from moving parts.



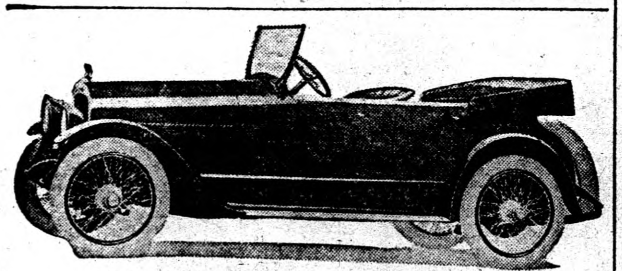
SPECIAL CABRIOLET BODY.

Distinctive model of the Cadillac eight-cylinder closed town car, 132-inch wheelbase.

On the other hand, when the motorist makes it a practice to buy gasoline produced by a reliable refining company he may be sure of getting the best grade of motor fuel that is commercially practical under present conditions. He is certain of maximum fuel economy, provided his carburetor is correctly adjusted, and he knows that he is keeping the proportion of waste to the minimum.

Many motorists consider gasoline as a standard, uniform product. Either they do not know, or they pay no heed to, the fact that, all over the country, the motor fuel of today varies even more widely in composition and characteristics than in price.

It is because of this carelessness that motorists frequently are induced to buy cheap gasoline, unsuspecting that inferior fuel usually contains compounds of sulphur or other foreign matter. Such is the chemical constituency of these extraneous compounds that they break down under the intense heat and high pressure of the combustion chamber, forming acids, which, even in minute quantities, have an injurious effect on the engine and, besides pitting and otherwise damaging valves and valve seats, they eat into the piston metal and cylinder walls.



ROOMY ROADSTER FOR FOUR.

Haynes "Fourdore" touring car, with improvements in chassis construction for comfort and ease in operation. Made in six and twelve-cylinder types, 127-inch wheelbase.

As a rule, these deleterious results of combustion from inferior gasoline soon penetrate the crankcase, injuring the piston and rings on the way. When they mingle with the lubricating oil they cause disintegration of the oil and formation of further injurious matter. Thus lubrication is impaired to a marked extent and friction, loss of power and wear are greatly increased.

Often kerosene is mixed with gasoline and sold for motor fuel. Such mixtures should be carefully avoided by the motorist who wants to keep his car in condition.

Gasoline is not a homogeneous liquid. It is merely a physical mixture of hydrocarbons, frequently covering a wide range of volatility. In other words, various parts of the mixture vaporize at different temperatures under identical conditions. In this respect gasoline corresponds to crude oil, from which it is derived. Crude oil, also, is not a chemical combination but a blend of compounds made up of hydrogen and carbon.

Of course, crude oil differs in properties and characteristics, as it is obtained from wells widely scattered throughout the world. It naturally follows that the gasoline produced from each crude retains the peculiar properties of its parent crude. For this reason, many gasolines, as primarily refined, are not suitable for use as fuel in an internal combustion engine. In these cases it is necessary to mix in gasoline produced from other crudes possessing the requisite volatility or other property which is lacking.

Natural gasolines are those obtained by the first step in refining—heating the crude in a large vessel called a crude oil still. First, the heat drives off the dissolved gases and then the lightest gasolines. These are followed by heavier gasolines as they vaporize under the increasing heat. Pipes carry the gasolines into condensers, which are kept cool by water, where they reassume liquid form.

Cracked gasolines are rapidly coming into more common use. These are produced in a number of different ways, some of the widely used methods being the Rittman, Burton, and Hall processes. The methods of "cracking" gasoline are more or less complicated and may be summed up as based on the principles of pressure, decomposition by heat and distillation.

Casing-head gasolines are obtained by condensing gases from crude oil wells under pressure. These gases are sometimes passed through heavy oils which absorb the gasolines. These are then released by distillation. "Casing-head" gasolines are so volatile that they evaporate too readily for commercial use. Thus they are almost always blended with heavier grades for use as motor fuel.

When motoring first became popular a rapidly increasing demand was created for gasoline, which, up to that time, had a comparatively small market. Motor vehicles multiplied so fast that refiners gradually came to a realization that commercial production of highly volatile gasoline on a scale sufficient to meet the demand was not practicable. Therefore they set about combining, or blending, gasolines varying in gravity and having boiling points that covered a wide range of temperature.

Naturally, both carburetors and engines have been gradually changed to meet these variations in fuel conditions. This factor, indeed, has exerted a very strong influence on modern engine design, and has even figured to a considerable extent among considerations in car design. Hot air intakes, hot water-jacketed manifolds and carburetors and many other methods of pre-heating and otherwise facilitating vaporization of fuel have been prominent features of automotive engineering during the last few years.

Frequently motorists have blamed the gasoline when the whole trouble was due to the absence of the necessary equipment for pre-heating the fuel before it was fed to their engines.

Thus, most of the established brands of gasoline for automobile use now on the market are blends of various kinds and grades of gasoline. The manufacturers aim to produce a fuel that (a) has sufficient volatility for starting the engine; (b) sufficient body to prevent loss by evaporation to any appreciable extent when in containers; (c) does not contain injurious foreign compounds; (d) means maximum output from the crude.

These makes of gasoline are substantially uniform in character and properties, subject, of course, to differences arising from varying refining processes used in their production. Then, too, it is possible to use much heavier gasoline in a motor car engine in the warm Summer weather than in the late Fall and the Winter months. Refiners, as a rule, take advantage of this by regulating the character of their products accordingly.

For successful use as fuel for an internal combustion engine it is essential that gasoline should contain enough of the more volatile grades to start the engine easily at normal temperatures. After the engine is running the heat of operation renders carburetion and combustion of the fuel much less difficult. The heavier components of such gasoline, however, should not have excessively high evaporation points. If this condition obtains, these heavier "ends," as the oil men call them, are not vaporized in the combustion chamber, resulting in impaired operation of the engine. When gasoline that is only partially vaporized is ignited in the engine it is never entirely burned.

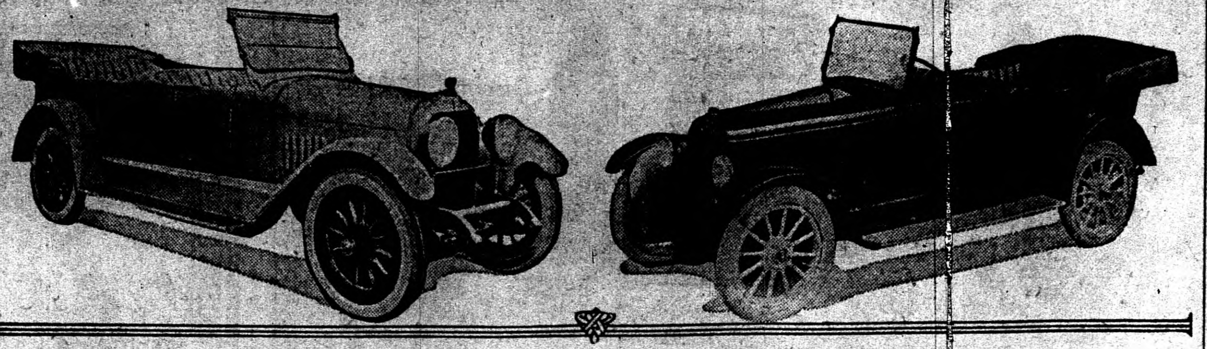
It is important for the motorist to know whether the gasoline he uses is entirely vaporized and burned in his engine or is only partially burned. When the latter is the case the heavier constituents are usually forced down past the pistons, cutting the lubricating oil off the cylinder walls on the way. The injurious effect of gasoline in the crankcase oil has already been pointed out. Incidentally, when these heavier parts of the motor fuel are forced past the pistons they leave behind a generous portion of their large carbon content in the form of deposit on the cylinder walls and pistons.

For some time, Federal authorities have been working toward standardization of gasoline for motor fuel with a view to regulating the character and quality of such products on the market. While creditable progress has been made, no definite action has yet been taken in approval of any particular specifications. The fact that gravity alone does not indicate the quality of gasoline has been definitely established, however. In some localities municipal authorities have adopted ordinances intended to regulate the sale of gasoline for motor fuel in their communities. Detroit is a notable example, its ruling prohibiting the sale of gasoline which has been mixed with kerosene or other heavy oils.

Comprehensive tests of gasoline quality, of course, cannot be made without laboratory equipment, and then only by experienced men. There is a simple test, however, that can be taken as directly indicating the suitability of any gasoline for use in an internal combustion engine. This test can be made in a few minutes by any motorist without expense. It is conducted as follows:

Into a small porcelain crucible pour about 30 c.c. of the fuel to be tested. Light it and allow it to burn freely till the fuel is entirely consumed. If only a small amount of carbon is left on the side walls of the crucible, and the bottom remains practically clean, the quality of the fuel is good. If the deposit of carbon on the side walls of the crucible is heavy and black, and if there is a thick black residue at the bottom, the gasoline is poor. There are, of course, any number of degrees of variation between these two extremes.

Primary considerations for judging the quality of gasoline and its suitability for motor vehicle fuel are the relative ease of starting in cool weather, mileage per gallon in ordinary use, heaviness or slightness of carbon deposits in the combustion chamber and degree of adulteration of the lubricating oil in the crankcase.



DESIGNED FOR THOSE WHO LOVE OPEN-AIR TOURING.

The Mercer and Nash cars, two makes well known to motorists. The four-cylinder Mercer on the left presents its characteristic simple streamline effect, with artillery type wood wheels. The Nash five-passenger six-cylinder car on the right is exhibited by the Kaufmann-Stowers Company. One of its features is the intake manifold close to the exhaust, thereby heating the gas vapor by radiation.

School for Automobile Mechanics.

As an extension of its automobile school, the West Side Y. M. C. A. announces the opening of a school for automobile mechanics, and a school for machine tool operators, to train men in all branches of repair work for garage and service station employes. The school will be conducted at 239 West Fifty-sixth Street, adjacent to the school for airplane mechanics.

The school will not compete in a commercial way with the garages and service stations of the city, although it is proposed to charge for such work as is taken into the school for the practical work.

LIKES 13 FOR AUTO NUMBER.

Brooklyn Motorist, After Three Years' Trial, Finds It Lucky.

For three years Joseph DeBragga of Brooklyn, an ex-Sheriff of Queens County, has had No. 13 for his car. Mr. DeBragga paid Secretary Hugo a visit a few days ago.

"I suppose you want the same number for 1919?" inquired Mr. Hugo.

"I certainly do," said Mr. DeBragga, "for it has brought me all sorts of luck. My son was released from the navy on Dec. 13, but that is only one example of good fortune that has come my way and I am quite sure that No. 13 on my car has been responsible."

Percy Lang, a banker in Waverly, has had B13 for his car for two or three years and is in the same class with Mr. DeBragga. A13 has gone to W. Scott Mattraw of Watertown, a well-known theatrical manager.

YEAR'S SPEED ARRESTS.

Over 5,000 Motorists Exceeded the Legal Limit in New York City.

According to records in Secretary of State Hugo's office, a total of 5,266 persons were arrested for speeding in New York City between Jan. 1 and Nov. 1, 1918. The fines aggregating from motor vehicle violations in the metropolis represented $147,671. In default of fines 171 persons were committed, 203 were not given the alternative of a fine, and 925 got off with suspended sentences.

Outside of New York City the report of the State Troopers shows that 1,669 convictions were secured out of 1,786 persons arrested for violations of the motor vehicle law. Of the total arrests 7,000 came from driving without proper registration plates, while 295 were arrested for reckless driving, and of this number 284 were convicted.

AIRPLANE ENGINES FOR MOTOR CARS

Discarded Flying Machine Engines by No Means Useless, Suggests Technical Expert

An interesting suggestion has been made by Frank F. Tenney, Principal of the West Side Y. M. C. A. school for airplane mechanics, that discarded airplane engines might be used serviceably in automobiles. Not all of the airplane engines shipped to France were demolished in the course of war. The greater number were retired because they were no longer effective.

"When one is told that the average life of an airplane engine is 100 hours it is startling," he says. "The question arises whether the airplane engine is suitable for auto propulsion. It was not designed for that purpose, and in some respects the ideals of the two engines are diametrically opposed, but it is not only feasible to put a used aero motor in an auto, but it already is being done.

"Here are some of the differences between the two motors which weigh for and against the substitution. The aero engine is made very light, and is balanced to a nicety. Lightness is essential, but the balancing eliminates much of the vibration experienced with the auto motor. The latter rests upon a sturdy steel frame suspended on springs and through these and rubber tires on the ground. The aero motor rests upon a light bed, supported by struts and wires to wings which rest upon the air.

"Just as the auto motor was better balanced than the stationary gas engine, which was mounted on a solid base, so the aero motor must be lighter and more finely balanced than the auto motor. Again, there is more care exercised in building the aero motor. It must be perfect because it needs to be more reliable. The driver cannot get out on a cloud to doctor up the aero motor as the chauffeur gets out and under when there is engine trouble.

"The aero motor is likewise much simpler. In all types except the Liberty motor magneto ignition is used. There is no battery ignition, or practically none, since 95 per cent. use the magneto. At the last automobile show there were only a few cars equipped with magneto. They have self-starter systems and battery ignition. The airplane engine has no self-starter. In a few cases it was tried, but I doubt if many are in service. There is no use for the self-starter. The engine does not stall in the air. If it does—good night. It either runs or doesn't.

"Then the lubricating system is much more highly developed than in the automobile, though some motor car builders are devoting much attention to this feature lately. This is one of the elements of greater safety. It is not more oil that is needed, but a positive supply under all conditions. Oil must flow to the bearings no matter what the position of the plane may be, and in the Hispano-Suiza and perhaps others the carburetor feeds gas and the lubrication works even though the plane be upside down for a considerable period.

"I said that after 100 hours of flying service the engine is scrapped. It may be in exceptional cases that an engine may reach 200 hours. This does not mean that the motors are worn out, but they are unsuitable for air service for several reasons. They begin to loosen up, as it is called, and the aviator does not want to take a chance. The valve cages, for instance, are very thin and sometimes they are ground through; but there are many where this is not true.

"After 100 hours' air service the motor loses 20 to 30 per cent. of its efficiency, but there is 70 per cent. at least left, and it is not likely to drop much below that with the ordinary usage of an auto engine. Incidentally there may be an auto engine which can stand 100 hours of full speed, full load testing, but I have yet to see one. The aero motor in an auto ought to last indefinitely.

"Theoretically the aero motor is built for one speed—full speed, the same as a marine motor—and the cams are designed for a uniform 1,200 to 1,500 revolutions per minute; the auto motor is designed for low or medium speed. It sacrifices efficiency at high speed to gain it at lower speeds; the aero motor sacrifices efficiency at low speed.

"A line of autos already is being built with an aero engine, and is successful. The Hispano-Suiza motor is a development of an auto engine. There has been too much labor expended on the aero motor to discard it after the cream has been taken off in flying."

By PROF. R. B. FAXON,
State College of Forestry at Syracuse.

Believing that the problem of roadside planting should not be entirely set aside during the movement for a greater mileage of improved highways, active steps are now being taken by the New York State Motor Federation and the State College of Forestry at Syracuse for the development of a planting scheme for the section of the highway running from Syracuse, to Utica, a distance of about 60 miles.

It has been demonstrated by those in charge of the work that aside from the purely ornamental value of trees along the highway, many practical benefits would result from their proper use. It is not generally realized that trees, by means of their shade during hot Summer months, prolong the life of the roadway for many years, and road experts in general are heartily in favor of this means for road protection.

Due to the emergencies of war work it was found necessary to keep many of the highways which formerly had not been used for travel in Winter open and free from drifting snows. That a demand will be made for keeping these roads open in the future is certain, and in place of many expensive and unsightly snow fences which now line our more open stretches of highway it has been found that much of this work can be performed equally as well by the proper grouping of trees and shrubs along the open areas. More general planting of fruit and nut trees along the State highways will be recommended.

For many years it has been a custom with most people to plant trees without regard to the ultimate purpose they would serve. Little thought has been given as to the most suitable varieties for planting, or that there might be sections along the roadway where it would be of advantage to cut the existing trees, and in this way make the roadside scenery more interesting and attractive. A closer study of the problem, however, shows that we have two distinct types of roadside scenery. The first may be said to be where the trees, shrubs, buildings, and other objects that border the highway form the element of the picture, with the roadway as a central feature. Many places along the roadside have no inducements whatever as to special attractiveness, and, in fact, the scenery may be of a decidedly monotonous character. It is in such a place that we may feel at liberty to plant according to the so-called closed type.

The second type can be used where the wide meadows, fields, and distant landscape compose the picture, with the roadside trees as frames. Examples of this type may be found in many sections of the State, where beautiful vistas could be enhanced by the presence of suitable shade trees. In many cases, trees along the highway form screens so as to break up the long stretches of views along openings here and there which make more attractive the roadside scenery.

It is sincerely hoped that upon completion of the plans sufficient appropriation may be secured from the Legislature so that at least one section of the State highway may be fully developed and serve as an incentive to many other sections to take up the work.

YEAR'S TIRE EXPORTS.

Canada, Argentina, and Cuba the Largest Buyers in 1918.

Canada, Argentina, and Cuba were the principal countries of destination of the rubber tire exports from the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918. The value of tires taken by Canada aggregated $1,766,518. Argentina took $1,049,840, and Cuba a total of $1,336,233. The value of other large exports was: New Zealand, $946,804; Philippine Islands, $863,727; Australia, $819,755; Mexico, $777,984; Chile, $725,876; British South Africa, $693,065; France, $661,648; England, $618,071; Brazil, $455,102; British India, $416,411, and Dutch East Indies, $347,912.

The grand total of tire exports for automobiles was $13,977,671, and of tires for other purposes, $1,130,628.

Interstate Highway System.

A trunk road running north and south and another east and west will be constructed in every State in the Union if the program indorsed at a recent meeting of the Highway Congress is enacted into law by Congress. These highways would be linked up from State to State in order to give the nation a complete highway system built at Federal expense.

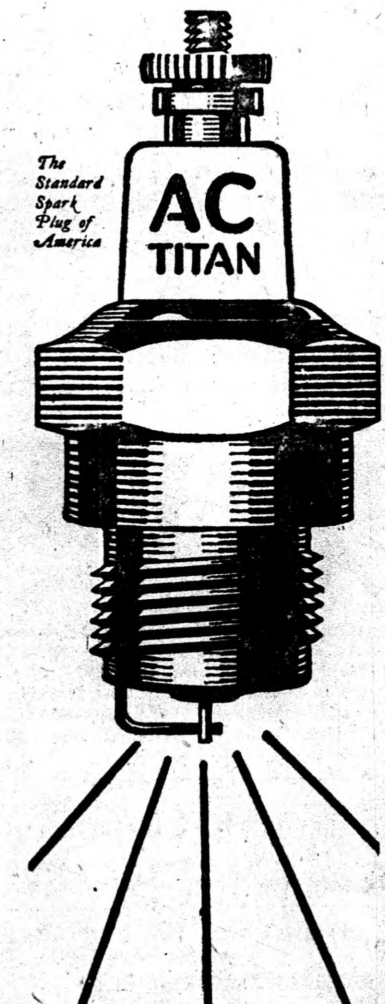
The Liberty and Hispano-Suiza Airplane Motors Were Fired by AC Spark Plugs



The Standard Spark Plug of America
AC
TITAN

The expert engineering talent of this country has registered the belief that AC Spark Plugs are the best spark plugs.

You may readily check this statement by investigating the spark plug equipment of the various automobiles on display at the Automobile Show this week.

You will see that the majority of these cars are AC-equipped.

At the AC exhibit you will find cross sections of the AC Aircraft Plug and of the standard AC Titan Plug for motor cars.

You will notice that basically, the design of these two plugs is the same.

One was standard equipment on Liberty and Hispano-Suiza airplane motors during the war, the other has been standard equipment on most makes of motor cars for years.

When United States army engineers sought a dependable spark plug for aviation service they conducted rigid tests. AC Plugs proved their superiority in terms so unmistakable that they were promptly adopted.

The automotive engineers of this country have been conducting similar tests for years. The result has been the adoption of AC Plugs by most of them.

So, men who know, believe AC Spark Plugs are the best spark plugs.

You may be sure therefore that AC Plugs will serve you best, just as they served the United States Government best in the most exacting service that spark plugs have ever been called upon to perform.

A Good Tire Year

Look at the tires on the cars you see on streets and roads.

Notice the growing preponderance of good tires —United States Tires.

And, bear in mind that this is despite the fact that many thousands who sought United States Tires have been unable to buy them.

Now, government restrictions have been removed. Production of United States Tires shortly will be on a far greater scale than ever before.

The nation-wide demand for good tires has forced a tremendous increase in our output.

Everyone is asking for tires of known value and proved dependability.

And that is precisely what United States Tires represent in the minds of hundreds of thousands of American motorists and truck owners.

Our ideal—to build good tires—the very best tires that can be built—is appealing to rapidly growing numbers.

There is a type of United States Tires to meet—and meet exactly—any possible need.

WHAT AMERICA PAYS FOR AUTOMOBILES

Controller Travis Puts Sum at $10,000,000,000 a Year---Covers Wide Industrial Field

By EUGENE M. TRAVIS,
NEW YORK STATE CONTROLLER.

More than 5,500,000 motor cars of all descriptions in use in the United States were registered in the several Commonwealths last year. These figures show that motoring has been the means of building up a vast industry. According to a recent report there are 230 manufacturers of passenger automobiles and 372 makers of trucks in thirty-two States, with a capital of $736,000,000 and employing 280,000 workers, at the annual wage of $275,000,000. The report also shows that there are 1,080 manufacturers of bodies, parts and accessories, having capital of $336,000,000, employing 320,000 workers and paying $288,000,000 annually in wages; that about 27,800 automobile dealers, located in nearly every town, have a capital investment of $184,000,000 and employ 230,000 persons, and that up to June 1 last 64,834 passenger cars and 15,977 trucks, valued at $133,411,000, have been exported. These figures speak well for the soundness of the American product, especially when we remember that only a few years ago our export trade was insignificant, while a large number of motor cars in use at home were of foreign make.

As a matter of statistics, 94 per cent. of the cars used in this country are of American make, and if a comparison were to be made upon values, this percentage would be still higher, for it can be safely computed that the motor cars owned in the United States aggregate a present value of nearly $5,000,000,000, an estimate placed on a basis of rating of 75 per cent. of the total number registered last year at $1,000 each, and the remaining quarter, or 25 per cent., at $2,000 each, both figures being exceedingly conservative, as the price of motor cars varies from as low as $400 to as high as $6,000. The statistics further show that $917,470,938 was spent upon the purchase of about 1,726,194 new cars by American motorists last year, and to this sum is yet to be added the value of the accessories, the supply of which forms a very substantial branch of the motor car trade.

But the annual expenditure for new machines, large as it is, is not all the expense, as the cost of running is heavy, witnessed by an industry which motoring has built up, namely, tire manufacturing which is becoming almost as large as the motor car building trade itself. Last year 18,000,000 tires were made the value of which is placed at $450,000,000. Next to the cost of tires is that of gasoline and lubricating oils, which are among the heaviest in the motorist's expenditures. Besides this, the cost of repairs, renovations, and periodical overhauls amounts to many millions, and, adding to this the sum of the annual registration and license fees, (reaching $25,000,000 so far this year,) the total expenditures would exceed $35,000,000. Statistics reported by the United States Bureau of Roads indicate that approximately $80,000,000 was expended for highway improvement last year by the several States and largely for benefit of the motorists.

While many owners keep their machines in stables converted to a new use, a large number are stored in public garages, numbering 26,500, or in buildings especially rented for that purpose, and the cost of this service aggregates a large sum, although perhaps the heaviest expense is in looking after the driving and care of the cars, the need of which has opened a new calling of vast extent. The professional drivers licensed in this country during 1911 were nearly 15,000 and since that time the number has increased two-fold. If the wages of this number were fixed at the rate of $15 per week and the compensation of others employed about the car were added, the total would reach upward of $5,000,000 annually, and thus the running expenses of the motorists, coupled with the purchase price and incidentals, would reach the enormous aggregate of billions of dollars.

But these figures cover only the direct expenditures upon cars and their operation and do not take into account the moneys spent indirectly in connection with motoring, such as the cost of suitable clothing, hotel and traveling expenses while touring, which add several additional millions to the total amount. The spending of this money benefits directly or indirectly a great number of people, especially the industrial classes. The proportion of direct labor expended in the production of a car varies greatly, according to the conditions under which it is produced. It is low where highly organized machinery is engaged in the production of the standardized mechanical details and correspondingly high in regard to the parts to which standardization cannot be applied.

The average of direct labor upon the car is small, but this does not by any means cover the entire cost to the manufacturer, as it only covers the labor employed upon the construction in the factories. There are, in addition to the items of rent and taxes, the heating, lighting and power, the wages of unskilled and skilled labor throughout the works, the salaries of the managers and the staff of supervisors, the highly skilled draftsmen, testing staffs and the clerical assistants who deal with the supplies and keep track of the work. Moreover, the manufacturers' purchases are high in the way of material which is not raw but the finished and partly finished product of other trades. When a machine is finished, still more labor is required for its distribution and sale and there is a large staff of clerks in the commercial departments of the different firms, managers, travelers and salesmen, and thousands of agencies all over the country and in foreign lands, all employing labor in taking care of and selling cars.

From first to last, over half the cost of a motor car represents labor, while the balance is not manufacturers' profit but such items as rent, fuel, light, heating, advertising, traveling expenses, office expenses, agents' commissions, depreciation of the plant and machinery, all of which represents profit and loss [illegible] must be distributed in dividends often representing but a slight percentage of the whole, while even in the numerous items mentioned as making up the balance between the cost of labor, an appreciable amount goes to labor in some form or another.

Apart from the cost of cars, if other items are analyzed similarly affecting the expenditure or upkeep, as already pointed out, it will be found that each and all pay their quota or share to labor. Tire prices, for instance, probably cover a large proportion of the wages to the laborers in this country, apart from their influence on labor abroad in the manufacture of rubber and cotton goods. Fuel and oil, while produced almost entirely here and representing a vast industry, call for work in refining which, with other handling and distributions, accounts for a good part of their price.

At least half of the cost of repair and renewals goes to labor, while even such items as garage expenses, registration and license fees and insurance, also mean employment of laborers and helpers. Taking all the expenditures of owners of motor cars, the benefits to the industrial classes must exceed in the aggregate a billion dollars annually. If the average of the wages and salaries of all engaged in the motor trade and other connected industries be taken into consideration as $1,000 per annum, it means that upward of 2,000,000 persons obtain their employment by that industry, and that something like 5,000,000 of the population are directly or indirectly supported by the manufacture of motor cars.

Then there remains an important item of depreciation which, although not one of direct-out-of-the-pocket expenditure, nevertheless represents a loss of capital and should be included. If this were done, it would add another large sum to the total, so that if these items are considered, it would indicate that at the present rate of increase the gross expenditure upon all branches of motoring will, before the present year is out, reach the enormous sum of over $10,000,000,000.

TO PREVENT ACCIDENTS.

Highways Transport Committee in Movement for Motor Safety.

The Highways Transport Committee of the Council of National Defense, through its regional, State, district, and local organizations, is preparing to give assistance to the nation-wide movement looking to a reduction of the number of accidents resulting from carelessness either on the part of drivers of vehicles or of pedestrians.

In this work it has the assistance of leading authorities throughout the country. The National Highway Traffic Association, recently organized for the purpose of advancing the efficiency and regulation of highway traffic, has indorsed this activity of the Highways Transport Committee.

Not only in Washington, where the number of accidents has been characterized by the press during recent weeks as appalling, but elsewhere throughout the country the loss of killed and maimed has reached such proportions as to suggest the urgent need for helpful methods looking to a radical reduction.

The introduction of motor trucks into the commercial life of the nation, which is taking place on such a large scale, also tends to increase the possibility of street and highway accidents. This may tend to result in a greater death and injury rate than in the past unless highway regulations are more generally adopted by authorities and copies of these regulations made easily available to the public.

Few Cars in Japan.

There are 4,000 automobiles in Japan, according to Y. Bryan Yamashita, a banker of that country now here on business. The population is 45,000,000, and the small number of machines is attributed to the fact that the country has no good roads.

NOTES OF THE TRADE AND THE SHOW

The most noticeable difference between the attitude of buyers this year and in former years is that now we sell reputation, whereas formerly we sold specifications, is the way that James J. Hunt of the New York Reo Company sizes up the buying situation. People have arrived at the conclusion, he adds, that past performance is the best guide to present and future quality, and they place their orders more on the strength of a trademark than on any details of construction.

The Studebaker exhibit is featured by a more detailed display of the many innovations in motor car designing and manufacturing than in any former year. The same cars announced last Spring will be continued during 1919, with slight changes in minor details and the addition of a few refinements to enhance comfort and convenience.

This year all Haynes cars are new and are marked with many refinements of body design and chassis construction. Four different body styles will be manufactured. They are the touring car, "Fourdore" roadster, sedan, and coupe. Both the six and twelve cylinder motor type will be built.

One of the new cars in the show is the Elgin four-passenger sport model, known as the Victory Scout. The chassis is finished in black and the radiator, fenders, and running board shield in black enamel, while the wheels have a natural wood finish. It is a six-cylinder car.

The engineers of the Liberty six car have discarded the ordinary steel gear and replaced it with the Fabroil gear, made by submitting thousands of layers of silk, impregnated with a secret chemical composition, to tremendous hydraulic pressure, and facing it on either side by fine steel plates. The gear operates with absolute quietness.

The new Essex car, shown for the first time this year, was designed by some of the best engineers in America, and is built at the Hudson plant in Detroit. It is moderately priced, economical in operation, has no useless weight, and is comfortable. It is a roomy five-passenger car.

The Reo cars in this week's show are in the Garden Exposition Hall. They include a six-cylinder sedan, khaki brown in color, trimmed with marine khaki throughout; a four-cylinder chassis, a four-passenger coupe, and touring cars with special bodies.

The Colt-Stratton Company of this city will exhibit at the show nothing but the standard types of Dodge Brothers motor cars, which include the touring car, roadster, sedan, and coupe. Their salesroom at 1,847 Broadway will show many bodies of special design, including a seven-passenger sedan, a limousine, a landaulet, and a four-passenger coupe.

Edward S. Jordan, designer of Jordan cars, has endeavored to reflect style tendencies in his new model, the town sedan. It forecasts the passing of the removable pillar in the closed car, family car, and the coming of the permanent, all-year-round closed car.

Of the more than 100 companies that are now building passenger cars in the United States, the National is one of five concerns that exhibited automobiles at the first New York show in 1900. The other companies of the present day, which also were represented then are Stanley, Locomobile, Winton, and Packard, the last named being known as the Ohio in 1900.

Mercer cars will be seen at the show in four models, comprising a touring six-passenger, sporting four-passenger, runabout, and raceabout.

The Liberty Motor Car Company added thirty-two new dealers to its sales force during the month of December.

G. A. Kissel, President of the Kissel Motor Car Company, states that his factory will concentrate its production year on one-passenger car chassis with several attractive body styles.

President Harry M. Jewett of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company prophesies that 1919 will be the liveliest and most successful year ever seen in the automobile industry.

The Chevrolet Review, in its reminiscences of early automobile days, calls attention to the fact that the first New York show was held in 1900, in 1898 gasoline sold for 6 cents a gallon, the first four-cylinder car was brought out in 1900, and in July, 1898, it was announced that a plant would be built to turn out one motor carriage a week.

"The immediate future of the industry holds the promise of a big season," says C. A. Pfeffer, general manager of the Saxon Motor Car Corporation. "The motor car is no longer a plaything or a luxury. It is a necessity just as much as our street cars or railroads."

The Saxon Motor Car Corporation is allowing its dealers to sign contracts with Saxon purchasers to the effect that the price will not be reduced further until June, 1919, and probably not then. This contract agrees that in case the Saxon car is reduced before that time, a refund will be made.

The Velie Motors Corporation assumed a large part in the war program of the automobile industry. For many months the maximum capacity of the Velie factory was devoted solely to war work.

The biggest year in the history of the automobile business is anticipated by F. C. Stowers, President of the Kaufmann-Stowers Company, Incorporated, local distributers of Nash passenger cars and trucks.

At the time the armistice was signed the Champion Ignition Company of Flint, Mich., was turning out 40,000 AC spark plugs daily as standard equipment on all Liberty and Hispano-Suiza airplane motors. In addition, the factory was supplying spark plugs for all standard Class B military trucks and for tanks and trucks of ordnance.

To The Owners Of Fleets Of Cars

A GREAT part of our business is with concerns using large numbers of salesmen's cars and delivery cars and trucks. They use STERLINGS year after year, because their own records show low ercost-per-mile.

The STERLING Super-Size Cord is the answer to their demand for a tire that will stand up and give service under adverse conditions.

From 30x3½ to 40x8, STERLING Tires are all husky, sturdy, extra large, extra tough tires.

We believe that putting two or three sets on your cars will give you a new experience in tire economy.

To Individual Car Owhers

Doesn't it seem reasonable that tires which show lowest cost-per-mile on delivery cars and trucks should give even better results on the lighter passenger vehicles?

Your dealer can get STERLINGS for you—or you can write or telephone our nearest branch.

CRIPPLED SOLDIERS LIKE MOTOR WORK

Mechanic's Course Popular at Lakewood Hospital---Training Schools Here and in Foreign Countries

By DOUGLAS C. McMURTRIE,
Director Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men.

When the boys who have been wounded overseas are visited in the hospital by the vocational officer who wishes to help them to decide on a future occupation, they usually tell him that they would like to take up automobile work. In Canada so many have declared their preference for motor driving and repair work that had the wishes of all been granted the Dominion would now be flooded with chauffeurs and mechanics looking for jobs. In order that the supply of men trained for these occupations should not far exceed the demand, many of them have had to be dissuaded from their intention and turned into other channels of industry.

In England, the Ministry of Pensions, which is in charge of the retraining of disabled soldiers, has listed motor driving among the occupations not approved for disabled men, believing that the vast army of drivers in the transportation service will, on demobilization, overcrowd the field. Training in motor mechanics, however, which includes design and construction of automobiles and operation and repair of gas engines, is given under the auspices of the Pensions Ministry in a number of hospitals and schools. Canada, France, Germany, and far-off India also offer training in motor mechanics to their disabled soldiers who need to learn a new trade in order to become self-supporting.

As comparatively few men of the American forces have as yet been discharged from the army, cured of their wounds, and ready for training, one can hardly do more than speak of the plans which have been formulated for training along this line. That American boys have a preference for the work as strong, perhaps, as that of their Canadian cousins is known—those particularly who have had experience "over there" as truck and ambulance drivers think naturally of continuing in similar work at home. For trained men, opportunities for employment in repair and service shops in this country are almost legion, owing to the enormous expansion of the automobile industry in recent years.

Every city, town, and village has its garage and repair shop, and all over the country there is a great demand for skilled automobile mechanics. Recognizing the opportunities which the trade offers to disabled men, who can make up for their physical handicap by greater knowledge, the Government is planning to provide training in it to men whose aptitudes and previous experience render their success in it reasonably certain. According to an announcement of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, in whose hands has been placed the responsibility for the American program of re-education, this training will be given in the shops of high schools, trade schools, or colleges where there is adequate equipment for good practical instruction. In addition to the school instruction, training will be given in commercial garages under actual shop conditions.

It may be that alternate weeks or months will be spent in the school and in the shop, or that the first or last part of the training period may be spent in the shop and the other part in school. In any case the aim will be to provide instruction which will enable the disabled man after completing his course to compete with able-bodied workers and to command the prevailing wage. It is expected that the man's previous training and experience will be from six to nine months.

The entire cost of this training will be borne by the Government and maintenance allowances will be paid to the men while they are following the course.

Already in some of the larger reconstruction hospitals in the United States wounded soldiers during their convalescent period are kept interested, busy, and cheerful tinkering with the fascinating automobile engine. At General Hospital No. 9, at Lakewood, N. J., and at General Hospital No. 2, at Fort McHenry, motor mechanics is one of the most popular courses offered. At Fort McHenry the men in the class have become so efficient at repairing and rebuilding the worn-out cars donated them that they have taken over the care of the ambulances and trucks in use at the post. Each man has an ambulance or truck assigned to him, and it is his duty to see that it is always in perfect running order.

Courses in motor mechanics are offered in a large number of convalescent hospitals in Canada, and the best technical schools in the country in collaboration with the Invalided Soldiers Commission have arranged special classes for disabled men. At the Montreal Technical School the instruction is divided into a number of courses, to each of which from two to three hours a week are given, supplemented by twenty hours a week of practical garage work. The course in mathematics takes up each individual of the class at the point where his previous training left off and carries him to the point where he can make the simpler computations of horse power, read a scale, estimate clearance, &c. The course in automobile engineering follows a standard textbook on the automobile. The first half of the course is devoted to the theory of the mechanism of the car; the second half to the cause and remedy of trouble.

In the West of Canada courses in motor mechanics are given at Calgary, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, and Vancouver. A class for returned soldiers who wished to become chauffeurs was organized at Victoria in the early days of the war by the Invalided Soldiers' Commission in co-operation with the Board of Education, and the men thus trained now conduct a well-patronized jitney stand in the town. A one-armed man, trained in automobile mechanics and gas engineering at the Provincial Institute of Technology and Art at Calgary, is preparing to go into business with a friend in a small flour and grist mill in the Peace River district. While his chum attends to the milling proper, he will take charge of the stationary gas engine which furnishes the power, utilize the engine for cutting wood, and in his spare time repair his neighbors' automobiles.

English "soldiers, sailors, and airmen" are afforded an opportunity to learn motor mechanics at Queen Mary's Convalescent Hospitals at Brighton and Roehampton. The New Zealanders can take a preliminary course in the New Zealand Hospital at Weybridge, while they are waiting for the artificial limb which is furnished by their Government, and then a practical continuation course in the big motor factories of the Midlands. In the hospital they receive a grounding in the principles of automobile design and construction and in the more simple operations that have to be performed in the maintenance and repair of motor vehicle chassis; in the work during a six-months' course they acquire a sound insight into the practical side of engineering.

Indian soldiers of the British Empire who have been disabled in the war are trained to be self-supporting at Queen Mary's Technical School at Bombay. They, too, have felt the fascination of the motor car, and the class for chauffeurs is the most popular in the institution. As there is a great demand for chauffeurs throughout all India, the men can obtain good wages as soon as they have completed a four or six months' course. One feels that it must be a curious sight to see the turbaned, bearded representatives of India's ancient races earnestly studying the throbbing cylinders of a modern motor car.

In France, disabled men are not encouraged to become motor drivers, since it is felt that the army-trained drivers will monopolize the field, but several of the larger schools, notably the municipal school at Nantes, teach automobile mechanics.

Germany has had excellent training courses in the trade for her disabled soldiers. Perhaps the best was given in the large re-educational school at Düsseldorf, which was organized by the provincial and city administrations and the local aid societies. The course was established at the request of the motor repair shop owners of the city, who needed workmen and could not obtain able-bodied men.

The increased use of agricultural machinery in all European countries caused by the shortage of labor during the war has created a demand for tractor drivers and mechanics. In Germany it was proposed to train former farmers for this trade, for they would know something of agriculture and be willing to stay in the country. In France there has been an endeavor to divert disabled peasants with a hankering to become motor drivers into this branch of the work. Since the country cannot produce the needed crops unless modern machinery is used to make up for the shortage of hands and since machinery cannot be operated without skilled mechanics, the French Government has organized courses in tractor operating in most of the agricultural schools.

A Great New Car at the Auto Show

The car that took the motor world by surprise is here—the New Elgin Six, a year and a half ahead.

Designed, tested, refined and perfected—slowly and carefully—while the Elgin factories were building war trucks—the New Elgin Six stands alone today as the only thoroughly new after-the-war car.

The New Elgin Six retains the notable sturdiness and light weight which won for the Elgin Six perfect scores and highest economy honors in every one of the many hard Endurance and Economy Contests it entered during the past 3 years.

Combined with superior Beauty, Performance, Durability and Comfort is the well-known Elgin standard of low fuel consumption and high tire mileage.

New Elgin Six cars have received many thousand miles of most strenuous and exacting tests under every conceivable condition and found eminently satisfactory.

Today New Elgin Sixes are driving smoothly over the mountains of the Pacific Coast, through mud and sand in the East and South, over country highroads and in crowded city streets—running safely and securely, always with plenty of power in reserve, and always under quickly responsive control. Everywhere the New Elgin Six is proving a true Motor thoroughbred.

A well trained organization and a large modern plant make possible the production of the New Elgin Six at a price within the easy reach of the average car buyer—$1395 f. o. b. factory.

Why accept a before-the-war model when you can get—at the same price—a New Elgin Six with more power, more speed, more beauty, more endurance, more comfort and more economy than ever before? Do not fail to see this great new car, the Ideal Peace-Time Six, with 36 Improvements and Refinements—the most interesting car at the Automobile show.

WOMEN SHOW SKILL AS AUTO DRIVERS

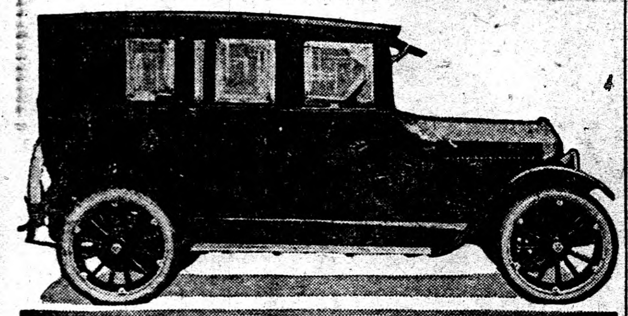
Thousands Have Done Splendid War Work in Motor Corps Divisions at Home and Overseas

By JOHN WALKER HARRINGTON.

Expert feminine drivers and civilian chauffeurs have been well trained in the various women's motor corps which sprang into being during the war period. Bellona of the ambulance and the military motor is already demobilizing to the limousine; soon she may be at the wheel of the public taxi or even at the levers of the ponderous automobile truck. Now that there are so many thousands of women in this country who will refuse to be rebottled, surely the calling of driving power vehicles is bound to claim many of them. What will be the effect? Will they be cool in danger, avoid collisions, and to the very letter obey all the rules of the road? The answer is to be found in the story of the several corps themselves, for they represent rigid discipline and the utmost efficiency.

Nearly all the women connected with the three leading corps have their own cars, which they have placed in the service of the nation. For a woman who is well enough provided with the goods of this world to submit to the word of command and to consider that the car she owns must be taken care of just as though it belonged to the Government is not so easy a lesson to learn.

The first organization on the broad highway was the Motor Corps of the National League for Woman's Service, then came the Motor Corps of America for women, and the Motor and Ambulance Corps of the American Red Cross. The corps of the league has 140 members in the city and seventy-eight chapters throughout the United States, with a membership of approximately five hundred women car owners.

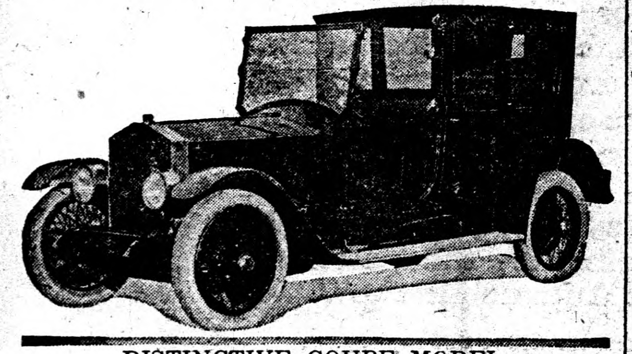


ROOMY SEDAN TYPE.

The new six-cylinder Scripps-Booth closed car, shown by the Poertner Motor Company. Divided front seats, wheelbase 112 inches.

The Motor Corps of America numbers 700 members in the metropolitan zone, which centres about New York, and includes not only the city but outlying portions of the suburbs of Westchester, Connecticut, Long Island and New Jersey. The Red Cross division has, in its metropolitan district of about the same extent, 839 cars, sixty-three ambulances and eighteen supply trucks. Besides that, there is an auxiliary force of 1,000 cars, driven by owners, being the Transport Patient Division, which takes out convalescent soldiers and sailors from the hospitals.

The members of these three corps wear smart uniforms, and what with their jaunty overseas caps on the sides of their heads, their trig Sam Browne belts, their short skirts and leather leggins, they have a military appearance which grips attention. The brown gabardines and khakis of the league, with the green stripe on the sleeve denoting active service; the light brown of the Motor Corps of America, with its bit of blue at the collars; the blue gray of the Red Cross drivers, are all quickly distinguished aside from the attractive insignia, of which the motifs are flying wings.



DISTINCTIVE COUPE MODEL.

Latest Phianna type of closed car in this year's show at booth of Morton W. Smith Company.

Although there are variations here and there in the regimen of the different organizations, the training and discipline follow the same general model. Every woman who belongs must know how her car is built and how to repair it and, if need be, to take it apart. This is something which cannot be left to James. The fact that thousands of women throughout the United States have become expert mechanicians through joining the Motor Corps means much for the future of American automobiling. The course of intensive training averages six weeks. The hands of most women who go through it are sights, but that does not matter in days like these. In order to qualify the candidate for admission to the different corps must have a State license as chauffeur. The owner's license, which could be had by the simple process of handing a pink check to an automobile dealer, will not suffice. By the time a woman has passed her test, based half on how the machine is made and half on how she can drive under difficult conditions, she should compare favorably with the best men chauffeurs in general efficiency.

Infantry drill is required at least twice a week while the candidate is in training, for, although the corps spends most of its time awheel, the precision and the smart and snappy manner which come from military training are valued. They give alertness of mind and poise, so highly desirable in the corps. Every candidate must be in good health and pass certain tests to show that she can see clearly, distinguish colors, and that her bearing is perfect. She is supposed to know the principles of first aid to the injured.

Looking at the feats of the different corps with reference to the future, the most noticeable feature is the readiness with which the members are being taught to respond to emergencies, and automobiling often brings times for quick decision and prompt action, even in piping times of peace.

This is emphasized in everything which is done, for instance, by Dr. Dorothy Smylley, who commands the motor trains of the Red Cross; by Major Helen R. Bastedo, who directs the Motor Corps of America, and by Captain Katharine Richards of the Motor Corps of the league.

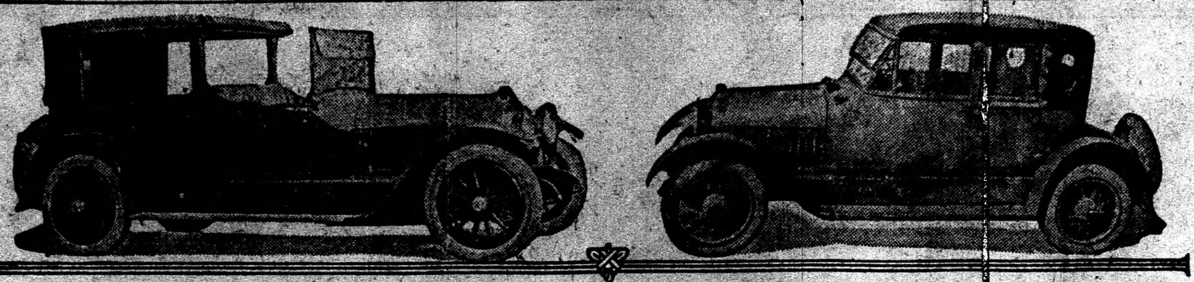
The members of the Motor Corps of America, for instance, report twice a week, in sections, to Police Headquarters, where they are trained in shooting revolvers. It is not that they are likely to have to defend themselves with firearms very much. One of the league motor members, by the way, was shot and one stabbed while shadowing criminals in cars in charge of Secret Service men. Major Bastedo of the Motor Corps has had a nurse's training and also attended a medical college before she became the head of the organization, and that is why she insisted upon all under command knowing something of surgery. Two hours a week are spent in an operating clinic where members can become accustomed to seeing human beings undergo heavy ordeals. A sharp reprimand was given the other day to one who tried to get away when she heard the sawing of a bone, and that young woman became one of the most valuable members of the corps because she had overcome her natural inclinations either to run away or to faint. There are many cases of dementia among the wounded soldiers who are being brought back, and the Motor Corps of America sends its candidates to learn about the treatment of the mentally unbalanced by attending the mental clinics at the State Hospital for the Insane.

The other day a six-foot victim of shell shock who was being brought from a transport started to run amuck. A little woman of one of the motor corps briskly took charge of him, waved aside all who offered assistance, and got him to an ambulance in the twinkling of an eye.

Just what the different motor corps have done for the women who have joined them was shown in the great TNT explosion which swept Perth Amboy and Morgan, in New Jersey. Scorning food and rest, scores of the motor corps drivers of the fair sex worked side by side with army veterans. They did the part of men, and did it well. Here were delicately nurtured women, many of them from homes of wealth, who, under the discipline of war, were subjecting themselves to every hardship, and doing it cheerfully. They had the nerve to keep smiling working near freight cars filled with the powerful explosive.

At the accident of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company the motor corps women went into the reeking tunnel and brought out the wounded and the dying and took them at top speed to the hospitals. They gave their help at the stranding of the Northern Pacific.

Now that the hospitals, both temporary and permanent, in the metropolitan district are filled with thousands of wounded and convalescent soldiers, the motor corps women will have plenty of work to do until final demobilization. They drive cars and ambulances which bring the military and naval patients from the transports, and they do it with a care and precision which has prevented any accidents.



REFINEMENT OF DESIGN IN CLOSED CAR MODELS.

The six-cylinder Locomobile shown on the left has a custom built convertible body on the standard 139-inch wheelbase chassis. On the right is the eight-cylinder Daniels four-passenger sedan, wheelbase 127 inches.

They are called upon to take the convalescent to places of entertainment or for rides in the country. It is not unusual to see a motor ambulance, in charge of two young women, come smartly up to the curb in front of a theatre. From it emerge fourteen wounded heroes of the war zone. The young women in charge see to it that their charges are safely escorted to their places, and then they are off again. One of the theatres gives a matinée for 2,000 wounded men every Thursday morning, and every one is brought to the place by the women of the motor corps. Some of the fair drivers are up at 6 o'clock in the morning so as to be on their way to Pelham and other outlying points in time to get their convoys down to Broadway by 10:30 in the forenoon.

Owing to the mission on which they drive their cars, the women motorists have the benefit of precedence. The police make way for them whenever possible, and advance them along the line ahead of civilian traffic. In the many months in which this work has been done with such dispatch there has not been an incident in which a woman of the corps has abused her privileges. Quiet, self-disciplined and alert, they watch their chances to get through the press of vehicles, and thereby they have won golden opinions from the police.

The training which so many thousands of women car owners throughout the country have received in the motor corps organization cannot but make for better traffic and fewer accidents when the country returns to a peace basis. The dexterity and sureness with which women who have undergone this intensive training, and the nerve and self-control which they have gained have already made an influence in New York City. The police are having less trouble in enforcing the traffic rules, as far as women are concerned, for the spirit of the motor corps has spread to women owners who are not members of the organizations.

Before the advent of the corps, there were few women who could disarticulate the bones of the cars, but there are now many of them who are doing well as mechanics. Some women have a greater mechanical bent than have many men, and there will be fewer heavy repair bills in future as far as the cars are concerned which are driven by corps members. Economies in fuel have also been effected.

Now, as to the question, "What of the woman chauffeur?" The reflex action of the activities of the motor corps is to encourage her arrival. It will be only a few months before many of the units will disband, but the Motor Corps of America will not demobilize, but will train feminine civilian chauffeurs. It refuses to use any such term as chauffeuse. There are women whose fortunes have been so altered by the war that the position of chauffeur would be attractive to them. Girls who have grown tired of the typewriter, or the counter, or of teaching, are likely to find their places at the steering wheel.

There is Sergeant Marjorie Cook, for instance, formerly of the corps, who has entered the ranks of professional chauffeurdom. Every morning she reports to her employer, a wealthy woman, who lives not far from Fifth Avenue, and she drives her limousine in and out of the tangle of travel with utmost ease. The United States Marine Corps has a woman chauffeur for the Major in command, a yeoman in uniform, who is one of the most expert drivers in the city.

Driving an automobile for a livelihood has its appeal in many ways to womankind, for the work brings the driver into the open air, and banishes many of the qualms and aches which come from living in steam-heated flats or under the glare of office lights. Scores of young women have positions, mostly as drivers for elderly members of their own sex, to whom they may act as companions and secretaries as well as chauffeurs. Others take charge of children on jaunts about the city or into the parks or country. They become cicerones as well as chauffeurs.

Many of the motor corps members have also driven huge lorries without a mishap, and it may be that soon women of a stronger type may be trained as drivers of trade trucks.

TRUCKS AND FRUIT HAULING

Florida Growers Find Motor Cars Cheaper Than Team System.

One of the sections of the country in which the use of motor trucks has worked a wonderful transformation is the fruit growing region of Florida. Several of the more prosperous growers, chafing at the slowness of transporting fruits by horse and wagon, purchased motor trucks in an effort to speed up fruit shipments.

It was found that solid-tired trucks could not leave the roads for fruit gathering in the sandy groves, without being stuck in the sand. One grower equipped his truck with pneumatic tires, which obviated the difficulty, and within nine months the number of pneumatic-tired trucks in the district increased to more than 300.

"In hauling fruits to shipping points we can operate our trucks from fifteen to twenty miles an hour," said one dealer. "The old team method required from two to three hours longer for the same distance. We now save twenty-four hours' time between loading at the groves and unloading at the packing house. We had decided to use trucks for this hauling even though the cost of operation might be higher than with teams, for we were willing to pay a little more for quick delivery, but after the trucks had been in operation for a few weeks we saw that truck operation was more economical.

"With team hauling, the men at the packing house were often idle between loads. The trucks soon changed this condition, and carried a continuous stream of fruit into the packing house."

AUTO EXPORTS TO LATIN COUNTRIES

South America a Large Buyer of American Cars During the War---Big Trade Opportunities

Automobile exports to South American countries have served to blaze the way for a more general introduction of American machinery and implements. The first buyers of automobiles in every country are the well-to-do people who set the pace, and whose actions, moreover, attract attention from the whole population. Thus, with South American countries buying regularly such motor vehicles as are exported from the United States, it will offer opportunities of increasing our exports of other materials necessary in agricultural, mining, and metallurgical industries. The principle involved is that by purchasing American cars the population of those countries grows familiar with the excellence of one of our important products, and will more easily be interested in any suitable article offered from American makers. Therefore, automobile exports from the United States to South America are of special importance.

During the year of the outbreak of the war our South American exports of motor vehicles and parts and of motor cycles amounted to $2,159,577. The most striking fact is that 1918 exports were seven times as big as those of 1914, the total last year being $14,595,700. This net increase of about 600 per cent. was realised during four years—a time in which the United States first devoted its chief commercial attention to exports to European belligerents, and then to its own needs as a belligerent. The manufacturing capacity under such circumstances was marvelous.

Our 1915 exports to South America totaled but two-fifths of the 1914 amount, reaching $876,543. The decrease of 60 per cent. from 1914 was due to a falling off of South American exports to Europe on account of difficulties in shipping, most available tonnage being needed for troop and munition transports. Aside from the colonies of British and Dutch Guiana, Venezuela was the only State showing an increase of automobile trade. On account of this gain, the country took second position as an importer of American automobiles among South American countries, while Chile showed relative improvement, rising from fourth place in 1914 to third in 1915.

The relative positions of the five leaders among South American States importing finished automobiles, exclusive of parts, for the five years during the war period are:

Separately:

1914 – Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay, Chile, Venezuela.

1915 – Argentina, Venezuela, Chile, Brazil, Colombia.

1916 – Argentina, Chile, Venezuela, Brazil, Uruguay.

1917—Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Brazil, Venezuela.

1918—Chile, Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil, Peru.

During 1916 South American countries had already succeeded, like those of North America, in adjusting the conditions of production and trade to the requirements of war. With Argentina, prospering on the world's scarcity of food, which was accentuated by the submarine warfare, leading all the other States, Chile rose to second place and Venezuela was pressed back to third position. Chile's rise is, of course, traceable to the growing importance of her saltpetre resources, this material being indispensable in the making of many war materials. Uruguay's industries likewise flourished on account of war industries and shipping, and that country, hitherto small and unimportant, took its place in the list of the five leaders. South American automobile imports of all kinds from the United States during 1916 totaled $3,938,241, an increase of 350 per cent. over the previous twelvemonth.

In 1917 the total amount was $8,591,073, exceeding the 1916 figure by 54 per cent. With Argentina and Chile in first and second positions for car imports, respectively, Uruguay, changing places with Venezuela, rose from fifth to third place. Uruguay's rise is explained by the increase of industry in the "hinterland" in Peru and Paraguay, whence shipments were sent to Europe through the port of Montevideo, increasing general prosperity. The South American centre of wealth shifted from the north to the south of the continent, with the mining States gaining chiefly in importance. Brazil stuck to fourth position, to which she had been forced in 1915 and which she held to the end of the war. This fact is explained by the circumstance that only one of her products—rubber—was a paramount importance to the conduct of the war.

In the last year of the war Chile took first place as an importer of complete automobiles, but her total of cars and parts was below that of Argentina. Uruguay and Brazil retained their respective positions, and the place of Venezuela, fifth position, was assumed by Peru, bearing out what has been said about the importance of mining territories. The total of 1918 exports, $14,595,700, is 70 per cent. higher than that of 1917.

The exports of motor cycles to South America are still ridiculously small. Compared with automobile sales, they amount to 5 per cent in Chile, close to 2 per cent. in Argentina, 5 per cent. in Uruguay, 2.5 per cent. in Brazil, and .1 per cent. in Peru. There is no doubt that the South American motor cycle market could be developed by rational effort to a large extent, and that by doing this the way could be opened for many other American products, thus generally increasing our export balance to these countries.

One item of importance emphasized by the figures is the matter of spare parts. It is essential that not only are the vehicles placed with the purchasers, but there should be a stock of repair parts in the more important centres of commerce, so that these vehicles can always be kept in good repair.

With the great commercial nations of Europe unable to devote as much of their energies to exporting as they could and did before the war, the automobile and accessory industries of the United States are now facing a great opportunity in South America for a wide expansion of trade.

STATE EXHIBIT AT SHOW.

Mr. Hugo Shows Odd Collection of Fake Registration Plates.

Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo has prepared an interesting exhibit for this week's show, possessing the novel feature of being the first of its kind.

The exhibit is mounted on a screen and consists of a collection of fake registration plates picked up by the authorities in various parts of the State and handed over to Mr. Hugo. Some of the plates show a marked cleverness in manufacture, while others are so crude as readily to attract attention and lead to the apprehension of the violators.

The exhibit also includes 1919 registration plates from practically every State in the Union, as well as from Honolulu. These plates in their varying sizes and colors present a pleasing combination.

Across the top of the exhibit, Mr. Hugo gives the motor vehicle growth in this State during the past year, and in connection with the New York show, figures will be given revealing the part which New York City has played in the growth throughout the State in 1918. The exhibit will be shown at the automobile shows in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Albany, Elmira, and elsewhere.

Farmers Buying Sedans.

A census recently made by the manager of an automobile factory making a popular car revealed the interesting fact that out of 1,643 owners, 331, or about 20 per cent., were farmers and ranchmen. It was also shown that the demand for closed cars was increasing among the farmers, many of the recent sales being Sedan cars.

GARAGE SEPARATORS.

Owners Discuss Changes to Law with the Fire Commissioner.

Within a few days Fire Commissioner Thomas J. Drennan will appoint a commission of engineers to determine whether the use of separators to separate the oil from garage drainage—a measure designed to reduce the fire hazard—answers the purpose for which the law requires its use and whether it is a cause of expense and hardship on garage owners. Their report will probably influence the stand he will take as head of the Fire Department when a resolution for the repeal of the present ordinance comes up before that body.

Last week the Commissioner discussed with twenty-five garage owners in the city every phase of the question. The owners seek to have the present law taken off the books. Under the law garage owners must install in their places a separator designed to minimize the danger of sewer explosions and the subsequent fire that may occur in places far from where the cause originated. At intervals since the law was passed by resolution of the Board of Aldermen attempts have been made to have it repealed. The last time such a resolution came before the Board of Aldermen was in the Mitchel administration. It was adopted and promptly annulled by the refusal of Mayor Mitchel to give his approval.

The garage owners last week complained that the use of the separator entailed expense and that it was almost impossible to keep it in good working order as it became clogged with waste and grease and that it was unnecessary with the present-day precautions against fire. The Commissioner made them no promise but he agreed to appoint engineering experts to make an unbiased investigation into the subject.

"My predecessors in office were all opposed to the annulment of this ordinance, and I am opposed to it now," said the Commissioner. "I want to be perfectly fair, and I do not want to pass judgment until I have heard all sides. For that reason I will ask the engineers to look into the matter. The cost of installing the separators is not great. It costs, I think, about $70. The city owns the patent rights."

Industry Quickly Readjusted

"Wartime curtailment of passenger car production has not crippled the manufacturer," says an official of one of the large automobile plants. "On the contrary, the magnitude of the work accomplished for the Government and the increased efficiency brought about by the necessity of the time, has left the automobile factories on a better manufacturing basis than ever before. With the decks cleared of all war work, automobile production can rapidly be restored to normal. And just as it was one of the first industries to adjust itself to wartime conditions, it is now one of the first to resume peace-time activity."

Ask your garage man

—what he recommends to keep your radiator from freezing.

Then ask him if it is a chemical compound —if he doesn't know, find out before you buy, because the U. S. Bureau of Standards warns: "Calcium chloride compounds should be used with caution if at all, on account of their corrosive action."

And most chemical non-freezing compounds are based on calcium chloride.

Play Safe by using Pyro Alcohol—

No corrosion, rust, choking or scale in the cooling system when PYRO Alcohol is used. PYRO gives sure protection from freezing as well as from radiator repair bills.

These are the same compelling reasons why the U. S. Government uses PYRO in its Army, Navy and Post-office motors.

PYRO is on sale at garages and filling stations, grocery and department stores, druggists, and paint and hardware stores.

PYRO also makes a wonderful cleaner for windshields and windows, as it does not freeze on the glass. Also an economical fuel for chafing dishes, percolators, spirit lamps, etc.

MOTOR INDUSTRY IN WAR SERVICE

Cut Production by 1,000,000 Cars to Manufacture Munitions for the Army and Navy

BY CHARLES CLIFTON,
President National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

War, with its trials and tribulations, is over, and the automobile industry is concentrating its attention on the immediate future—it is looking forward, not back. Every effort is being made to return as rapidly as possible to peacetime activities. Normally, the automobile trade is optimistic; it never could have grown to its present magnitude if manufacturers and dealers had not been possessed of confdence in the growth and prosperity of the United States. During the past year circumstances over which the industry had no control, such as the shortage of material, restrictions of the War Industries Board and the sudden suspension, curtailment and cancellation of war orders, taxed this optimism severely and for a time tended to convert it into pessimism; but this period, like the war, is drawing to a close.

It has been remarked within the trade that "some guardian angel seems to watch over the automobile industry." It is recalled that the automobile industry was the first to recover its equilibrium after the shock of the financial panic of 1907, that the National Automobile Show in New York, which opened coincident with that crash on the Stock Exchange, served during the succeeding week to dispel the gloom that engulfed the industry and to restore a large measure of confidence in the business world. The shock that unsettled the world when the great war broke out merely jarred the automobile industry temporarily. As it dragged out its weary length it bore more heavily upon it as foreign markets were shut off by import prohibitions, increased tariffs, lack of shipping and high freight rates. Still the production and sales of cars and trucks increased at almost an unprecedented rate until last year, when there was enforced curtailment.

Manufacturers took advantage of the recent lull to put into effect improvements in car and truck models worked out by their engineers during the year, to reorganize their distributing and dealer organizations, to feel out market conditions and forecast the future sales probabilities, and generally to clean house preparatory to a new start. Manufacturers are getting back into production of both passenger cars and trucks more quickly than might have been expected, urged on by the desire to provide continuous employment of their large forces of loyal employes, who were confronted with the danger of being thrown out of work temporarily during the Winter as a result of suspension of war work.

Most of the truck makers are running at nearly normal production—some, indeed, at an increased rate over 1917—while a few big passenger car companies have been able within the last two months to get back approximately to their last year's schedule, and others have attained to 50 per cent. or more of it. By Spring, if there are no untoward developments, the industry should be running on nearly normal basis.

With their usual optimism, the manufacturers view present unsettled conditions throughout the country and the civilized world as only temporary and look ahead to future activity and prosperity in industry and commerce in the United States and in those countries not adversely affected by the war in Europe. This feeling is justified on the ground that world stocks of foods, clothing, textiles, and all sorts of manufactured articles and various raw materials are low and must be replenished, that building and highway construction have been largely suspended for several years and must be resumed, that railroads need rehabilitation, that the shipbuilding program will be continued, and that farm production must go on indefinitely at enormously stimulated rate.

All such activity will call for increased and more efficient transportation, which means more general use of motor trucks and passenger cars. Foreign markets that have been shut off by prohibitions against imports of motor vehicles, high duties, lack of shipping, and high freight rates will increase their purchases of American cars and trucks, which have won favor in fields where formerly the products of Europe dominated. Automobile and truck makers are studying the export situation and laying plans to increase their foreign sales.

Normally the production and sales of motor vehicles in this country increased at a rate of 40 per cent. a year. In 1915 and 1916 the passenger car increase was 50 and 80 per cent., respectively, but in 1917 it fell to 17 per cent., and last year there was a decrease of nearly 40 per cent. If the normal increase had been maintained throughout this four-year period the output last year would have been approximately 2,250,000 instead of the actual production of 1,044,754, and there would have been built about 700,000 more cars than were actually made. So there is an apparent shortage of that number of cars. For the year 1919 there should be a potential market for 3,000,000 cars, but in all probability not more than half of this number will be produced.

The used-car market has been pretty well cleaned up. Several hundred thousand automobilists who have got along during the war with their old cars will want new ones this season. Boys with the American Army who have learned to drive cars will feel they must have machines for private use when they have been honorably discharged and return to remunerative employment.

Hundreds of thousands of women whose husbands, brothers, and fathers went into the army and navy became proficient automobile operators and will not be satisfied to ride as mere passengers, but will want cars of their own, or will make use of the family car. So it is probably a safe estimate that there are half a million new candidates for car sales.

Money will get into more general and free circulation as the Government effects settlement under war contracts, as the military forces are demobilized and paid, and as public and private construction and replacement work are resumed. This will relieve the financial situation and put more money in the hands of individuals to spend as they see fit, or as judgment dictates. The automobile has now demonstrated so conclusively its utility and convenience that more than ever the public will deem it a necessity.

The country is aroused to the need of immediate improvement of the highways on a scale never before contemplated. Several bills have been introduced in Congress to provide for this, and various States have added bond issues for the construction of highway systems of hard-surfaced roads.

DUTIES FOR ONE CHAUFFEUR

Resigned When Told to Freeze Ice Cream, and Carry Wash.

Chauffeurs in Albany have been amused at the orders recently drawn up by a motor car owner and handed to his driver. The driver promptly resigned, and information is lacking as to whether a more amenable chauffeur was obtained. The orders were: Arrive at house 7:30 A. M. except Sunday, then arrive 8:30 A. M.

Call at house and see that ashes are removed from stove and bring in coal, ice, and wood.

Before leaving at night see that cook has wood and coal.

Clean porches Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings.

Cut lawn both ways and trim with shears around shrubbery every Friday or Saturday.

Every Monday morning take wash to House of Good Shepherd.

Clean cellar every Saturday.

Car to be brushed out every day and washed, when dirty, after every trip.

Carriage house, bathroom, garage, harness room, kept clean and in order.

Every Sunday A. M., after getting coal, wood, and ice for cook, freeze ice cream and be ready to take girls to church 9:50 A. M., and return at 10:10.

Freeze ice cream when told.

Your uniform kept pressed, shoes shined, and very neat appearance when driving.

Tardiness, insolence, laziness, inexcusable.

All orders given are in kindly spirit and should be received in same spirit.

Never drive cars without uniform, hat, and gloves.

No chauffeur is allowed the use of the cars.

Never wear uniform before or after driving and keep same on hanger.

IDEAL MOTOR NEEDS.

Sir David Salomons of England Has Remade All of His 86 Cars.

In discussing the post-war car, Sir David L. Salomons, Vice President of the Royal Automobile Club, gives as many as twenty-six points which are worthy of special consideration, and these, he considers, are only a few of those which go to the make-up of an ideal vehicle. His experience, according to The Scotsman of Edinburgh of Dec. 26, undoubtedly warrants his conclusions, for already he has possessed eighty-si xcars of most makers. What may be somewhat surprising is that Sir David is never satisfied with the car when it comes from the maker. He proceeds at once to rebuild and improve it, spending upon this delightful hobby of his no fewer than three or four months before he ventures to risk the car on the road. It is interesting to find that he is not a believer in the disk wheel, but prefers the metal spoke wheel. One would imagine that his preference is based on the appearance of the car. The disk wheel does not appeal to the artistic sense, although it undoubtedly serves an important utilitarian object, continues The Scotsman's motor critic. Most owner-drivers will approve of his desire that all possible parts of cars should be altered so as to enable them to be taken apart without special tools. Indeed, the chief aggravation of a car in these days is that scarcely anything can be altered or manipulated without particular appliances. Simplicity of design will in the long run help toward this desirable end. As an illustration of the perfection of workmanship on one car, of which Sir David Salomons speaks with favor, he mentions that the differential bevel wheels are run by four small bevel wheels upon a cross. If the pins of the cross are oiled the wheels cannot be put on; that is, the work must be to at least one ten-thousandth of an inch. The wheels must be put on dry, and oiled afterward. Such perfection of workmanship ought to be common to every motor car factory in these days when gun mountings and shell cases have had to be turned out by the thousands with equal accuracy.

Auto Tax for Oklahoma Roads.

Governor Robertson of Oklahoma hopes to induce the Legislature to adopt a $40,000,000 bond issue for the purpose of supplying the State with a connected road system. It is his idea that interest and sinking fund can be met chiefly through the production tax from oil and the registration tax from automobiles.

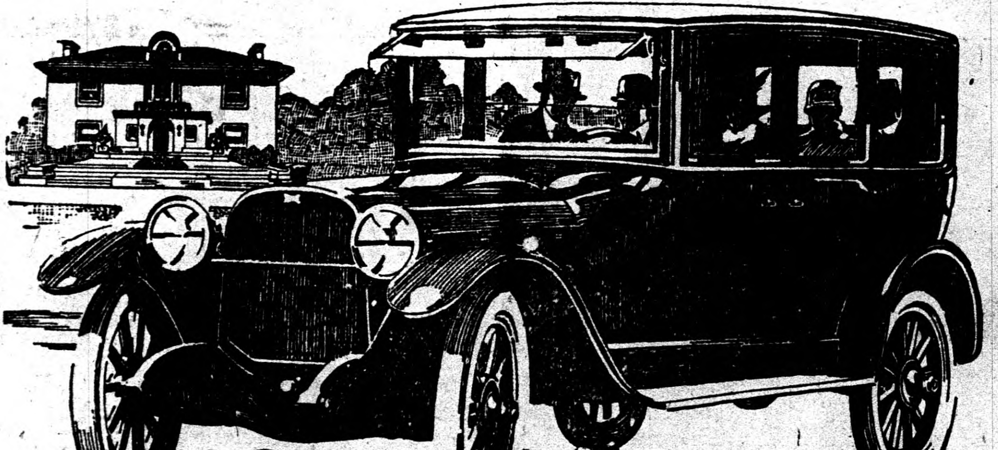
CHANDLER SIX
Famous For Its Marvelous Motor



50,000 Owners,
50,000 Friends

THE greatest single factor in the continuous and increasing growth of demand for the Chandler Six is the extraordinary satisfaction fifty thousand Chandler owners have found in this great car.

Because of what these Chandler owners know and say of their car, thousands more choose the Chandler each year.

This year, twenty thousand more, if the factory can supply that number, will become enthusiastic Chandler owners.

Chandler offers more for less than any other car. A determined Chandler policy provides a really fine car at the lowest possible price. Chandler holds its leadership for 1919 just as distinctly as in the past.

Handsome Chandler Sedan Now Only $2495

This beautiful big car is quite in a class by itself. Gracefully designed, splendidly finished and upholstered, roomy and comfortable, it is a car of exceptional refinement. In inclement weather it may be wholly enclosed, offering snug protection against the cold or snow or rain. On warm, pleasant days, with the windows lowered away, it is open to the sunshine and the soft air.

The Chandler Sedan seats seven passengers when its auxiliary chairs are in use. It is sturdily built and withstands the rack and strain of rough roadways.

The war period just passed has given to the Dort new and greater prestige.

The lesson people have learned as to the value of thrift and conservation has awakened within them a deepened respect for the Dort.

They have always held it in high regard as a smooth-running, competent motor car.

They have prized it for its driving ease and riding comfort.

Now they are quickened to an intense appreciation of the solid virtues that characterize it—its economy, its reliability, its faithful performance.

They are conscious, as never before, of how really good a car it is.

They perceive more sharply than ever how desirable a car it is to own.

At the Dort exhibit you will find a full line of the various models.

We urge upon you the importance of setting aside sufficient time while there to become acquainted in detail with these cars.

They are fine examples of able engineering practice and sound, careful construction.

They will impress you as worthy automobile investments.

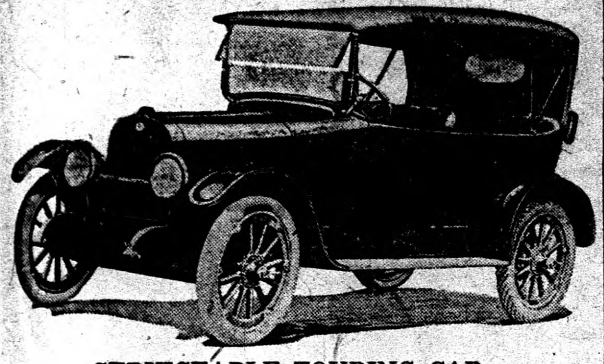
RECKLESS DRIVERS MUST BE CURBED

Pedestrians Also Must Observe Care, Says Magistrate House---New Motor Law Proposed

The question of legislation or ordinance that will curb careless driving of automobiles in this city and protect the competent drivers is now occupying the attention of many organizations for civic betterment and those responsible for enforcing the existing laws. There is a feeling that more power should obtain over chauffeurs; that the Magistrates or other authorities should be able to revoke drivers' licenses and take other measures to "rule off" the reckless driver. This, because statistics show that the number of accidents appear to be increasing and that strong measures only will materially reduce the number of accidents.

Magistrate Frederick B. House, now on ninety days' leave from the Traffic Court, has been one of those who has spent himself in the effort to make the chauffeur realize his responsibilities and to make the public come to a realization that the proper operation of automobiles is of vital importance, and that it is only with the help of the public that the campaign for safety can go forward. He has invited the Board of Education and other bodies to assist in spreading the doctrine of careful driving. Like others, he believes that the proposition of safety is a fifty-fifty proposition and that the public must not take unnecessary risks any more than should the chauffeur.



SERVICEABLE TOURING CAR.

ROOMY COUPE FOR FOUR PASSENGERS.

The Willys-Knight four-cylinder small closed car. Body and wheels finished in French blue, black top with nickel and polished aluminium fittings. Wheelbase 121 inches.

"A very tragic situation is presented by the figures of killed and injured during the last year," said Magistrate House. "Something must be done to decrease the number of accidents and we are going to find out how this can best be done. In Maryland, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New Jersey the Commissioners of Motor Vehicles have absolute control over licenses. In some of these States there is no hesitation in taking licenses away from offenders. This has had a beneficial effect. Persons do not mind paying fines. They would much rather pay than go to jail. They do not like to have their licenses taken away. In some cases that would put them out of business. As a consequence in these four States there appears to be more respect for the law than in States where the driver knows that his license is less liable to be revoked."

There has been difficulty in the past in getting competent legislation. This condition cannot always hold, for, he thought, that when the people become aroused they will demand some statute that will really protect them and at the same time will not infringe on the rights of the operator who is careful of the safety of others. To take away the license of the reckless and speeding driver is bound to mean a lessening of accidents, says Magistrate House.

"No reflection is intended on the safe and sane driver," he continued. "I think most motor car drivers try to exercise care and obey the laws designed to safeguard them as well as the public. Every sane driver, however, is afraid of the fast and reckless driver. We can reach the drivers, but we have no way of reaching the pedestrians except through education. It is through education, and that is the only way we can reduce the number of careless pedestrians. Legislation to meet the needs of New York must be carefully thought out, and when once laws are passed they must be rigidly enforced."

One course that will bring about a better situation, in the opinion of County Judge Louis D. Gibbs of the Bronx, is to pass laws which will make it impossible for those with criminal records or those physically unfit to hold licenses to operate motor vehicles. These classes, he says, are largely responsible for the growing list of accidents.

"I am in favor of the enactment of stringent laws designed to prohibit the morally and physically unfit from operating motor vehicles," said Judge Gibbs. "It seems to me that the granting of a license should be regarded by the authorities as a very serious responsibility in the light of the fact that an automobile may be very dangerous in the hands of a physically unfit person and a convenient instrumentality for the commission of crime by those with criminal instincts.

"I do not wish it understood that I am in any way in favor of restricting the legitimate use of the automobile or preventing proper persons from operating automobiles, but every time the State issues a license to operate an automobile it extends a privilege, and it is therefore in duty bound to safeguard the public to the fullest extent within its power within reasonable limitations.

"I am also in favor of giving the Magistrates and other Judges having jurisdiction the power to revoke licenses under certain circumstances. I think it would be a very salutary thing if persons who are flagrant and habitual violators of speed laws should receive a substantial prison punishment after conviction instead of fines, as a warning to others similarly inclined. The casualties resulting from reckless automobiling in the streets of this city are appalling and it is the duty of the authorities to deal with offenders with drastic severity.

"The records of the Chief Magistrate's office show that in the last year forty-seven men who gave their occupation as chauffeurs voluntarily appeared before the Chief Magistrate and asked to be committed to some institution to be cured as drug addicts. One man appeared twice within a year. Rarely is an investigation by a probation officer ordered at the Traffic Court. Unless the defendant offers an extraordinary excuse that seems to the presiding Magistrate worth investigating with a view of extending leniency, he is sentenced without his record being investigated, for the reason that close to 15,000 defendants were dealt with in that court last year.

"Commissioner William J. Lahey, in charge of the Detective Bureau," added Judge Gibbs, "said that some provision should be inserted in any new law that may be enacted prohibiting that class of persons from obtaining a license to operate motor vehicles. He suggested that the only way to prevent a criminal from obtaining a license under his own or an assumed name is to fingerprint every operator of a motor car."

Colonel Edward S. Cornell of the National Highways Protective Society is taking steps to have introduced into the Legislature a bill designed to compel every operator of a motor vehicle in New York City to undergo a thorough examination as to his physical and mental condition and his ability to operate a car.

An Announcement
by Barney Oldfield

To the Motorists of America:—

For nearly twenty years, I've been entertaining you by riding fast in an automobile.

On dirt tracks, speedways and roads—from Maine to California, and all points in between—against competition and against time—I've hit the turns as hard as they'd hold me—now and then a bit harder.

But now, as an entertainer, I'm through—through, because I've developed something better to offer you. That development is the Oldfield Tire.

Since my first accident, my tires became the most vital part of my automobile. I must have tires that would be safer, more durable—tires that would really "stand the grief."

In study, experiment and test I covered more than a half-million miles, wearing out more tires, I am sure, than any other driver in the world.

I worked with experts and tire production men, adding their scientific knowledge to my practical experience.

And I found a lot of vital tire facts.

These facts are embodied in the Oldfield Tire—a tire I can turn over to you with my own personal recommendation as worthy of your trust in all kinds of going.

I'm making Oldfield tires in all sizes, plain and non-skid, fabric and cord, but in only one quality—the best I know.

My company is in full swing. Tires are coming through now in quantity production.

Looks Fit to Stand Anything

When you see a truck with this distinctive looking hood and radiator, look it over if you get the chance.

You will find it lives up to its good looks.

Notice the radiator particularly. It looks different from the cheaper types you see on many motor trucks.

And it is. The Clydesdale radiator is made from seamless copper tubing sweated into a brass header—the core being bolted to top and bottom tanks of polished aluminum, all supported by solid cast side members and carried upon the frame by heavy coil springs.

Of course this construction costs more—a lot more, but it pays Clydesdale owners. There are no seams for the vibration to open. You have to smash a Clydesdale radiator to make it leak. And this is almost impossible due to the heavy nickel guard bars. A leaky tube can be easily plugged and the truck kept moving.

This is only one example of many distinctive features you will find about the Clydesdale, that have made it one of the most dependable trucks ever sold in this city.

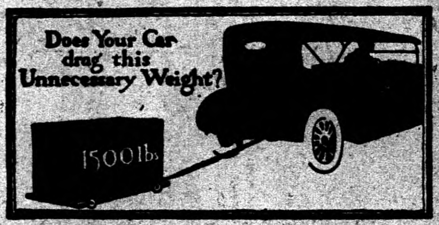
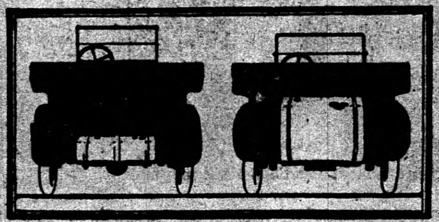
The Franklin CAR

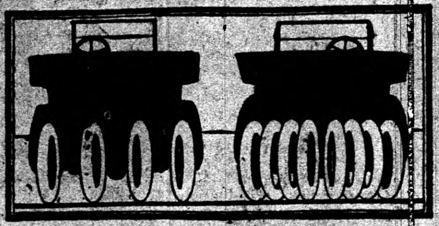


Does Your Car drag this Unnecessary Weight?
1500 lbs

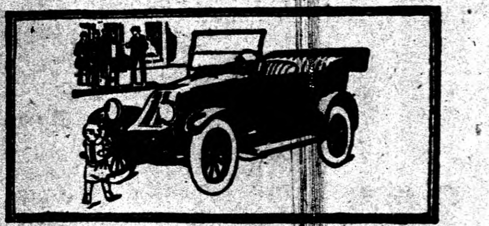
Most fine cars in America are literally dragging around 1500 pounds of unnecessary weight.



The average heavy and rigid car would require a clumsy gasoline tank twice the size of the Franklin's, to go the same distance with one filling.



The heavy and rigid car needs twice as many tires as the Light Weight Franklin to go the same distance.



This actually happened in Detroit. The Franklin is easy to move—hence requires less fuel to move it.

Franklin Economy vs. Heavy Car Inefficiency

20 miles to the gallon of gasoline—instead of 10 10,000 miles to the set of tires—instead of 5,000

50% slower depreciation than any other fine car

THERE never was a time when the American public was more interested than it is today, in the idea of an efficient motor car, as opposed to the old idea of wasteful, inefficient, unsatisfactory motoring.

As more and more motorists find the Franklin Car consistently delivering an economical service of 20 miles to the gallon of gasoline—instead of the usual 10; 10,000 miles to the set of tires—instead of the usual 5,000; and a high resale value—instead of a fire-sale price—they are asking for an explanation. And finding it in one word, WEIGHT.

Why Excess Weight Means Motoring Waste

Heavy Weight in a motor car is distinctly a liability—not an asset. Unnecessary weight is bound to mean waste. Weight requires power in proportion to move it; and represents excess costs that cannot be justified by performance.

The Franklin—America's First Light Weight Fine Car—is based on the engineering ideal of Lightness with Strength—on the principle that mere weight does not mean strength. That, on the contrary, the highest motoring efficiency can only result from light weight, scientifically distributed and properly supported. And for sixteen years, the publicly-known facts of Franklin performance have demonstrated the merit of the principle.

The Story Told by the Gasoline Tanks

Take Gasoline. Heavy weight means friction, wear and drag—and it always shows up in the gasoline tank. Free from the handicap of weight, the Franklin utilizes its fuel to deliver power to the rear wheels in sheer driving force. And the result is the steady, day-by-day delivery of 20 miles and more to the gallon of gasoline.

What Heavy Weight Does to Tires

When you find the heavy car getting only half the tire mileage delivered by the Franklin—look to the weight of the car, and you'll find the answer. Heavy weight and rigidity unmercifully pounds out tires—they never get a chance to wear out. Franklin Light Weight is reinforced by Flexible Construction, which unfailingly absorbs the pounds and thrusts of the roughest roads. And Franklin owners often run without a spare. They are simply not conscious of tires; for they are free from the sharp reminder of tire-trouble.

What Franklin "Easy-Rolling" Means

The entire result of Franklin lightness, balance and flexibility is summed up in the phrase, "Easy-Rolling" which means minimized friction. It explains, not only the remarkable Franklin economy, but also its riding-comfort, its quick responsiveness, its ease and safety of handling.

* * * * * *

If you are interested in an automobile; if you are determined to find the car that will deliver to you the greatest amount of satisfactory transportation—at the least expense, you will lose no time in investigating the Franklin.

Come in and see the Franklin Car. Demand absolute proof of the performance you may expect to get from it. Note its trim appearance—the gracefully sloping lines of its French-style hood. Ride in it. Observe, not only its economy, but also its ease of handling and the manner in which it takes the roads just as they come, without nursing.

And then—compare its performance with that of any other fine car in the country.

SALESWOMEN—

YOU CAN DUPLICATE THIS WOMAN'S SUCCESS IN SELLING.

Up to the middle of last month Mrs. Lucy R—— had never in all her life sold anything. She had a room to let which is how our head designer happened to meet her.

"So you design custom-made corsets?" remarked Mrs. R——.

"I wonder if I could sell them?"

"Try it," was the suggestion. Next morning Mrs. R—— called at our office. We showed her how to fit. Next day she called on a woman whose name we gave her. The first week she took nine orders and made $36 in commissions. Since then she has made steady gains.

Mrs. R—— is busy, happy, and independent. She is putting money in the bank. Wouldn't you like to hear her story from her own lips? We can offer similar opportunities to a few more women under 40. Write B 259 Times.

The remarkable growth of the Exchange is the direct result of the guidance and foresight of these gentlemen. Themselves employers of every degree of skilled brain worker, they have eliminated the handicaps and weaknesses of employment service, as generally known, and have placed it on a sound basis of efficiency.

Seldom if ever has there been a time when a man of real ability could not find a position of some sort. His chief difficulty lay in securing the position for which he was best fitted, which paid the full measure of his worth, and which offered him sufficient outlook for advancement. But now, through THE NATIONAL, it is an inexpensive and a comparatively simple matter for such a man to find his proper place, either in the business world or in the field of technical endeavor.

Bear in mind that THE NATIONAL is not an employment agency in the commonly accepted sense of the term. Its work begins where that of the ordinary agency ends. Only the better grade of positions are listed, and its service is restricted to individuals of proven ability and integrity.

THE NATIONAL makes a constant aim of putting the RIGHT MAN in the RIGHT PLACE. We are employment experts, and have facilities for opening up markets for your ability which you could never reach through you own unaided efforts.

So great has been the need for an organization like ours, and so efficient have we been in serving it, that after ten years of successful operation we have become a permanent fixture in the business world. Our clients include the representative houses of every line. Many of them look upon THE NATIONAL as an integral part of their organization, much the same as though they had a well-established employment department of their own.

To January 1st, 1919, our records show that we have placed 47,406 men and women in positions calling for executives, engineers, and other technical men, salesmen, accountants, bookkeepers, stenographers, and clerks at salaries ranging from $12 a week to $15,000 a year.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FIRE PREVENTION

What to Do Before and After a Fire—The 100 Per Cent. Clause.

LOSSES ON THE INCREASE

Careless Use of Matches Responsible for Over One-Quarter of the Total Loss of Property and Life.

The Fire Insurance Committee of the New York Credit Men's Association, of which Thomas A. Edison is Chairman, has prepared an interesting booklet offering valuable suggestions for fire prevention. The booklet is in two chapters and was originally prepared for the information and guidance of the members of that body, but as the information contained therein is of such practical value and presented so clearly and concisely, the association deemed it advisable to give it wider circulation.

The first chapter, headed "What to Do Before a Fire," advises property owners to provide themselves with fire insurance of a volume sufficient to cover any possible loss in companies approved of by the Insurance Department of the State in which the property to be insured is located. As all companies approved of by the State Insurance Departments are not of equal strength, the insurant must look well to the proportion of net surplus to size of the companies in which the insurance is placed. It states:

"See that the written, typewritten or printed forms, privileges, or stipulations attached to all policies covering on the same property read exactly alike.

"Copies of several successive inventories are of great help as corroborative evidence and two successive accurate inventories are invaluable in the adjustment of a loss. Keep same in some other place than where the property insured is located.

"As stock increases, increase the insurance in proportion, being careful to have same concurrent with all other policies covering your property.

"If an average clause or coinsurance clause is a part of the policy contract do this: If 80 per cent., carry not less than $8 insurance on each $10 of value; if 90 per cent., carry not less than $9 insurance on each $10; if 100 per cent., carry not less than $10 insurance on each $10 of value. In the instance of the 80 per cent. clause or the 90 per cent. clause it does not mean that you collect only 80 per cent. or 90 per cent. of the loss, but having complied with the conditions of these coinsurance clauses, the companies are liable for any loss, large or small, to the amount of the policies, notwithstanding these clauses.

"If stock insured covers under a blanket form in several different locations, and a distribution clause is attached to the policy, do this: See that insurance is carried of volume sufficient to cover the entire value of the stock.

"If both a distribution clause and an average clause or coinsurance clause are a part of the policy contract, the total insurance is first distributed to cover in each location in proportion to value, and then the coinsurance clause applies in each of those certain locations on the value involved in each location.

"The 'average clause' and the 'reduced rate contribution clause' are identical in effect with the coinsurance clause. This latter clause determines the proportion of the loss for which the company is liable, which is declared to be such proportion as the insurance bears to the whole value, to 90 per cent. of the value, or to 80 per cent. of the value.

"The percentage is always given in the clause. Therefore, with a 100 per cent. value provision, the assured must carry as much insurance as he has value. In the 90 per cent. provision and and the 80 per cent. provision he must carry an amount of insurance to at least 90 per cent. and 80 per cent. respectively of the value in order to recover the full amount of any loss up to the amount of insurance. However, the presence of the 80 per cent. and 90 per cent. provisions does not prevent the assured from carrying insurance to full value if he wishes, and with the same effect as if the clause contained the 100 per cent. provision. In other words, a distribution clause makes a blanket policy of the same effect as separate policies on each section of the property just as soon as a fire occurs."

In the second chapter, "What to Do After a Fire," valuable hints are given on what steps are to be taken in bringing about the adjustment of the loss, chief of which are the protection of the property so as to minimize any further damage to it and by notifying in writing all insurance companies carrying the insurance.

The booklet has received high commendation from heads of various insurance companies, while on the back cover is inscribed the following paragraph by President Wilson: "Preventable fire is more than a private misfortune. It is a public dereliction. At a time like this of emergency and of manifest necessity for the conservation of national resources, it is more than ever a matter of deep and pressing consequence that every means should be taken to prevent this evil."

The importance of these suggestions for fire prevention is self-evident when it is pointed out that 16,000 lives and $250,000,000 in property are lost every year in this country's fires. These figures were made known at a fire prevention conference held on Jan. 9 between a special committee of the Fire Marshals' Association of North America and officials of the National Board of Fire Underwriters. At this conference it was also brought out that careless smokers and users of matches were responsible for $15,724,556 of the total loss of $60,466,054 worth of property by "preventable fires" in the United States during 1918.

THE NEW PRASADA.

A Unique Reconstruction Job on Central Park West.

The reconstruction of the twelve-story Prasada apartment house at 50 Central Park West at a cost of $400,000 marks an event in the real estate history of New York of great importance for two reasons, the first being that the reconstruction of fine buildings that have been poorly designed is as important as the building of new buildings.

It is now demonstrated that recently constructed steel fireproof buildings are practically imperishable excepting as to their interior, which can be ripped out and done over again when changing conditions make it necessary or much use causes a wearing of the working parts.

Some ten or fifteen years ago architects designed large apartments with long halls in which one, upon entering, passed the kitchen door and various bedrooms and bathrooms before finally reaching his destination, the main living room. The Prasada was designed along these lines.

The new owners are going to rip out the entire interior, adding elevators, fire towers, and stairs so there will be no such long halls and the building when completed will be equal to or better than a newly constructed building, for the reason that in 1905, when the Prasada was constructed, materials were used of a quality which are almost prohibitive in price today.

The life of a modern apartment building in so far as its interior is concerned is about thirty years, at which time an absolutely new construction as far as its partitions, plumbing, and working parts are involved is necessary to render it as good as new. It is, therefore, shown that the modern steel fireproof building depreciates in value each year about one-thirtieth of what a proper reconstruction interiorally would cost.

Authorities agree that this amount will not exceed 30 per cent. of the total cost of the building, assuming, therefore, that an apartment building valued at $1,000,000 spends $300,000 every thirty years in entirely reconstructing its interior, the depreciation can be figured then at $10,000 a year. The walls, foundations, floors, excavations, and land representing the other 70 per cent.

The new Prasada reconstruction is to be very much more extensive than originally outlined, for it is going to meet the difficulties of the servant problem, which has become increasingly difficult during the last decade. There is to be added a swimming pool and gymnasium to the building, besides providing dining room, grill room, barber shop, and news stand and other features of a modern hotel.

They will not, however, lose the characteristics of the apartment house in so far as the seclusion of a private home is concerned, for they do not intend to cater to transients, neither do they remove from the apartments the housekeeping feature.

In fact, they add very materially to the conveniences of housekeeping by the special feature of connecting every kitchen with a main kitchen by fast-moving electric dumbwaiters. In this main kitchen they are to employ chefs to cook for the tenants just as they will employ elevator boys to carry tenants to their floors.

They plan to maintain an adequate house service bureau, so that any housekeeper may obtain any service she wishes by the hour. In this way the housekeeper may be independent of servants entirely if she chooses or she may keep house by doing that part of the work which is pleasant for her and obtaining specialized maids to do that which is drudgery to her.

Many women like to cook a dinner, but they do not enjoy washing dishes; they may not object to making a bed, but they do object to cleaning rugs, &c. The hourly service plan makes it possible for her to pay some one for doing what she objects to doing and cutting her cost for maid service in less than half.

To those who wish to keep but one servant there are added difficulties, for general houseworkers are hard to get, but under this plan one specialized maid may be kept and others obtained by the hour for any purpose whatsoever. In other words, each householder has at his beck and call the service of a distinguished chef and his assistants without charge, and any other specialized service from laundresses to butlers on an hourly charge basis.

This plan has been very successfully worked out by the same group of artists who built up the Artists' Colony on Sixty-seventh Street. These buildings are all co-operatively owned, that is, approximately one-half of the buildings are occupied by their owners, the other half is rented for revenue.

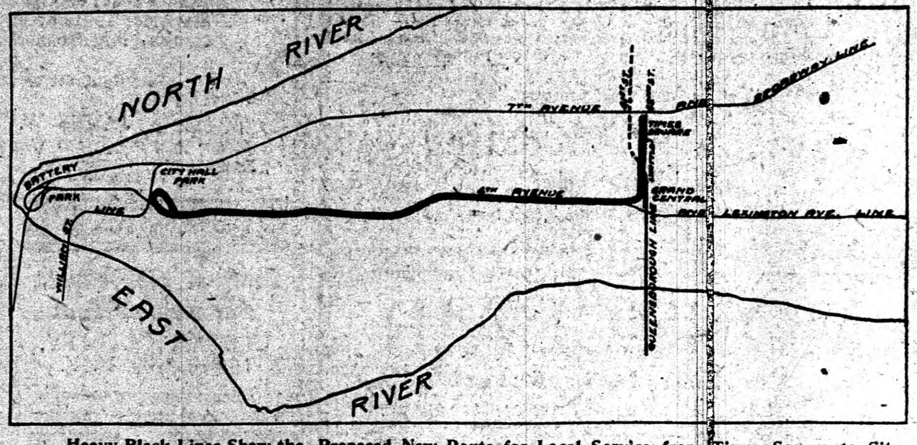
The principle upon which they work is that it has been figured by them that when one lives in a New York apartment building for seven years one has paid the landlord all the money that the landlord has put into it and the tenant has nothing to show for it excepting rent receipts, while the landlord still holds the deed.

The artists of Sixty-seventh Street became their own landlords by paying the seven years' rent in advance to themselves. These buildings by their books have shown that the owners get their money back about every seven years, either in rental dividends if they occupy it themselves or in cash if they rent them to some one else.

A surplus is arranged for from revenue to amortize the mortgage, which in turn increases the book value of each person's ownership so that in the older of these buildings erected by the artists, the equity is nearly twice what was paid for it. Owners have sold after having lived in these buildings for years for nearly twice the original cost.

NEW PLAN TO RELIEVE SUBWAY CONGESTION AT TIMES SQUARE

Will Permit Operation of Trains Between Times Square and City Hall—Its Adoption by the Public Service Commission Probable.



Heavy Black Lines Show the Proposed New Route for Local Service from Times Square to City Hall and a Suggested Deviation in the Route of the Queensboro Subway to Forty-first Street and Seventh Avenue. The Broken Line Shows a Possible Extension of the Queensboro Subway to West of Times Square. The Long Light Lines Show the Present Trunk Line Subways and the River Lines.—Drawn Especially for The New York Times by the Public Service Commission.

For the purpose of relieving the congestion of traffic at Times Square and the Grand Central station the Public Service Commission has selected out of a multitude of suggestions and plans one providing for through service of subway trains from Times Square to the Brooklyn Bridge and City Hall. This method was conceived by Public Service Commissioner Travis H. Whitney, it was indorsed by a number of civic organizations especially interested in the matter, and it has been pronounced practical by officials of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company.

In brief, the idea is to operate local trains from Times Square on the present shuttle tracks in Forty-second Street and then south on the tracks of the east side subway, making all local stops to the terminus at City Hall loop. A plan of the proposed method, drawn by engineers of the commission, is shown herewith.

The idea, as outlined by Commissioner Whitney, was printed in THE TIMES last Sunday. He explained that three classes of passengers are affected by the Forty-second Street situation—those from the west side subway desirous of reaching points on the east side south of the diagonal station; passengers between the west side subway and the Queensboro subway, and passengers between the west side subway and stations on the Lexington Avenue line north of Forty-second Street.

Under the present plan of operation passengers on the west side subway traveling to points on the east side have to change at Times Square and change again at the Grand Central, which entails a walk of about 600 feet at the Grand Central Station. Under the new plan no change would be necessary save at Times Square for passengers desirous of reaching points on the east side as far south as the City Hall and Brooklyn Bridge.

There is to be no change in the old plan of bringing the Queensboro subway to Times Square except that the proposed plan calls for a deviation of this line under the corner of Bryant Park and Forty-second Street with a station at Forty-first Street and Seventh Avenue. This is the alternative of a plan for using two of the tracks now in Forty-second Street with a stub end at Times Square. It has been suggested that a station at Forty-first Street and Seventh Avenue, at right angles to Times Square, would make possible an ultimate extension westward of the Queensboro tracks as far as the North River.

Mr. Whitney explained that this suggestion had two strong recommendations. It will make possible the extension westward and it will divert Queens passengers from the Times Square station to stairways at Forty-first Street. Attention was called to the fact that the great congestion that now prevails at Times Square is largely caused by passengers desirous of reaching the east side subway or the Queensboro subway. A separation of the two streams would add greatly to the comfort and expedition of both classes of passengers.

In his statement published last week Mr. Whitney pointed out that the structure in Park Avenue immediately south of Forty-second Street has been built in such a manner as to permit of the proposed improvement and without the necessity of grade crossings, so that it could be put in operation without any material limitation upon the capacity of the local tracks of the east side subway.

He also explained that to allow for sufficiently frequent local service on the proposed Times Square-City Hall trains it would be necessary to install crossovers in Forty-second Street to the west of Sixth Avenue. This particular work, together with certain other minor work, he said, would not cost more than $100,000. In reply to a question as to when the proposed improvement would be ready for the use of the public, Mr. Whitney replied that plans had already been begun, but that the forced retirement of a large number of engineers by the curtailment of the necessary appropriation by the Board of Estimate had compelled the commission to suspend the work.

"The main difficulties in the way of rapidly progressing with the work," he said, "is lack of money and lack of authorization. As soon as we receive these two necessary things the work will again be taken up and pushed to completion. We expect to receive both within a short time, and within ten months, if the commission authorizes the work, the improvement will be completed.

"Work on the plans had been begun, but the lack of engineers, due to insufficient appropriation, made it necessary to stop the work. Now that we are in a fair way of having all the money needed to expedite the rapid transit work, the task of finishing the plans will be begun. Altogether the work ought not to cost more than $175,000, which is a very small sum when the added speed, comfort, and convenience which the plan promises to afford the public is considered."

THE MORTGAGE SITUATION.

Title Guarantee and Trust Co. Trustees Are Optimistic.

Discussing the mortgage market in its annual report, the trustees of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company say:

"The mortgage market is undoubtedly brightening. We have received more good applications in the last month than we have in the six months preceding. The savings banks again are in the market for good mortgages.

"It is not time yet to consider building loans. The price of material is so high and the scale of rents so low in comparison with the cost of erecting a new building and running it that it is impossible to build new buildings, save possibly downtown office buildings, and show a proper income on the investment.

"Buildings now in existence can be purchased at prices that will pay better incomes than any new buildings that can be built, with materials at their present prices. As a result, lenders do not want to advance money to construct buildings that are not needed.

"In Manhattan and the Bronx in particular, the lack of space for living purposes is not yet severely felt. Rents are higher, but the increase has not been enough to offset the increased cost of operation.

"It seems unkind to suggest that rents must be higher than they are, but until the present policy of making real estate bear the major burden of the taxes for the support of the City Government is changed, rents have got to go up.

"The real estate owner is now paying about 30 per cent. of the net earnings of his property in taxes and unless some of this is put upon other shoulders and unless the expenses of the City Government are curtailed, the apartment dweller must pay high rent for his home accommodations, the grocery man must pay a high rent for the privilege of conducting his business and must in turn pass it on to his customers.

"The suggestion that taxation on real estate should be limited ought to meet with favor from all those who are interested in real estate or in the city's welfare as a whole. As an investment, real estate cannot be attractive if a yearly increasing percentage of income is to be taken by the taxing authorities. If the tax laws can be reformed so as to be half-way just to real estate, we are willing to prophesy a great real estate revival."

Building Hearings.

The Board of Appeals will hold a public hearing on Tuesday afternoon in Room 919 Municipal Building on the following matters:

Goodale, Perry & Dwight, Inc., to permit in a business district manufacturing in excess of 25 per cent. of the total floor area of building at 41 West Twenty-fourth Street, Manhattan.

John J. Dunnigan, architect, to permit partly in a business district and partly in a residence district the erection of a public garage at 351-361 Troy Avenue, southeast corner of Carroll Street, Brooklyn.

John J. Shea, owner, to permit in a business district the conversion of a five-story stable into a garage, at 117-119 West Forty-sixth Street, Manhattan.

VOLUNTEER HOSPITAL GROWS

Work of completing the building of the Volunteer Hospital, located at Beekman and Water Streets, is now under way. The foundation for the hospital, which was officially opened by Governor Whitman in 1914, was laid for seven stories and a solarium, but due to war conditions only three stories and the basement were completed, equipped, and placed in service. The other four stories and a solarium are now being added at a cost of $175,000.

The hospital has been officially assigned a district by the city, taking in the territory from Beaver Street, approximately to Canal Street, west to the North River and south to Chambers Street, to City Hall, down the east side of Broadway to Beaver Street. The three motor ambulances have answered 4,000 calls a year, and during the last year the dispensary gave 38,000 treatments to 14,000 cases. The services of the official, surgical, medical, and social staffs are given without charge.

The following compose the Advisory Board of the institution: George F. Baker, Jr., Vice President First National Bank; Philip De Ronde, President Oriental Navigation Company; Thomas N. Leeming, President Nestle's Food Company; George W. Morgan of Breed, Abbott & Morgan, attorneys; James H. Post, President National Sugar Refining Company; Herbert L. Pratt, Standard Oil Company; Charles H. Sabin, President Guaranty Trust Company; James A. Stillman, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the National City Bank; E. V. R. English Housing Activity.

In a recent issue attention was called to the uncertainty of the completion of Federal housing projects commenced in this country during the war, and reference was made to the huge sums appropriated for this purpose in England. From recent issues of The London Municipal Journal the following practical instances of the outworking of British policy have been gleaned:

Gainsborough Council has decided to erect 200 workmen's dwellings.

Mansfield Woodhouse Council has requested its surveyor to prepare a scheme for 100 houses.

Ripon City Council has approved the plan prepared by the surveyor for the erection of 130 houses.

Chester Rural District Council has decided to put into operation a scheme for the building of 150 cottages.

Rushden Urban District Council has prepared a scheme for erecting 100 houses.

Driffield Rural Council has sanctioned a scheme for the erection of thirty cottages.

Batley Town Council is to prepare a scheme for the provision of not less than 300 houses on sites in the possession of the corporation.

Evesham Rural District Council will apply to the L. G. B. for sanction for loans of £9,800 for the erection of twenty-four cottages at Badsey, and £5,750 for the erection of sixteen cottages at South Littleton.

The Housing Committee of Blackburn recommends the erection of 500 houses.

The Chelmsford Town Council has also recommended the erection of 500 houses.

Nottingham Housing Committee recommends a scheme for at least 1,000 working-class dwellings.

Houses by Mail.

Now that building operations held in abeyance during the last few years are about to be resumed, there is some apprehension in the United States lest the next decade will see an overstandardization of domestic architecture. The tendency, say those whose business is to know about such matters, moves toward the day when a man may order his house by mail, with the advantage of knowing just what it will cost and the disadvantage of not employing his own architect; but, say those who uphold the system, in most cases he will really employ a better architect.

Nor will this wholesale building of houses by corporations altogether eliminate the private architect. Ready-made clothing, for example, produced a like standardization, but it did not eliminate the custom tailor, nor did it make all men look so much alike that anybody need be disturbed over their similarity.

QUEENS BUILDING REVIVAL.

Banks Making Loans for Construction Along Subway Lines.

Queens builders and property owners are preparing now for the effect that the new transit routes will have on values and especially the demand for apartments.

There can be no doubt that the dual transit routes will have a wonderful influence on the real estate situation in every section of the borough. Many builders are already preparing plans for intensive building and are making arrangements with financial institutions for mortgage money which, according to information obtained yesterday, is now plentiful.

A number of leading institutions in Manhattan and Queens have offered mortgage capital for permanent and building loans at 5½ per cent. to builders and property owners along the line of the dual subways. In fact, only yesterday arrangements were made by two prominent builders with one of the local banks for building loans for the erection of twenty-five buildings each.

The recovery of building activity in Queens is due in no small measure to the wonderful transit situation there. Every line is modern because the development of Queens transit is of comparatively recent date. The claim has been made that Queens was favored above other sections when the new transit was mapped out. A look at the map would justify such a belief, because every great transit artery in Manhattan has a loop turning east into Queens.

There are four lines leading into Queens from Manhattan Island, tapping the great shopping and trade districts on the way. At Fifty-ninth Street the Broadway subway turns east, and continues into Queens via. the new Sixtieth Street tunnel, now nearing completion. The Second Avenue elevated line sends its trains across the Queensboro Bridge into Queens at Fifty-ninth Street; the linking of the elevated construction with the bridge, having been completed, and trains placed in operation from the Brooklyn Bridge to Queens without change.

At Forty-second Street the Fourth Avenue Interborough subway transfers passengers to the Queensboro tunnel, which runs from the Grand Central Terminal, under Forty-second Street and the East River to Queens. From midtown Manhattan many use the Long Island Railroad from the Pennsylvania Station, at Thirty-third Street; quick and frequent service being afforded to all nearby stations in Queens.

The Queensboro subway is to be extended across the city through Forty-second Street, west to Times Square, connecting there with all subsurface routes which pass through the Union Station at that point. The Seventh Avenue route, which is the west side of the leg of the Interborough Rapid Transit system at present is connected to Queens by the shuttle through Forty-second Street, under which is to be built the extension of the Queensboro tube.

Economists, investors, and builders are watching the working of the miracle which now is transforming Queens. The flow of applicants for apartments is so strong, and the character of the new population is such, as to warrant the building of fine type apartment houses. Some doubted the advisability of this kind of construction, but the success which has attended the Garden apartment houses in the Jackson Heights section is sufficient encouragement for others to come into the field.

In less than three years thirty-four separate apartment buildings have been erected, and more than 600 suites of three, four, five and six rooms put on the market, renting for $10 and $12 a room.

Land and apartment houses and investment in apartment houses in this area offers not only a good income, but promises a substantial increment due to the present low price of land, which is certain to advance as the area develops. As a field for investment and building operations Queens offers great opportunities now that there is ample mortgage capital available.

FARMS FOR SOLDIERS.

Realty Men Suggest That Government Buy Land on Long Island.

The Real Estate Exchange of Long Island held a well attended meeting Thursday at the Cafe Boulevard.

President J. W. Doolittle occupied the chair, and among other matters discussed was the question of zone fares on transit lines in the various boroughs. The association voted its approval of a system of zone fares and a committee was appointed to determine the limits of the five-cent zone. It was stated that at the present time it cost transit companies a fraction over a cent to carry a passenger a mile and that any haul of over five miles at five cents was a dead loss.

John W. Paris suggested that instead of offering soldiers farms in the far West the United States Government buy acreage on Long Island and sell it to the boys at cost on the installment plan. It was stated that there were 200,000 acres of land available for this purpose that could be purchased very cheap. Three acres will keep a family of five and yield a good living, according to a statement made by an authority on the subject. The Chairman appointed a committee to confer with State and Government officials on the subject. Nine new members were elected.

New Transit Lines.

The new lines added to the rapid transit system in 1918 comprise the Broadway subway from Union Square to Times Square and from Canal Street to Whitehall Street; the Seventh Avenue subway, including the Battery and the Wall and William Street branches; the Lexington Avenue subway, with its Jerome Avenue branch and part of the Pelham Bay Park branch, all of which are city owned, and the following company owned lines: The 162d Street connection with the Jerome Avenue branch of the Lexington Avenue line; the third track on the Ninth Avenue elevated from 125th to 155th Street, and the Jamaica Avenue elevated line from Richmond Hill to the terminus at Jamaica in Queens.

Woman to Build Apartment.

William Lawrence Bottomley, architect, will prepare plans for a six-story fireproof apartment accommodating thirty families, to be erected at the southwest corner of 227th Street and Arlington Avenue, Marble Hill section. The owner is Miss Dora M. Lesley. Construction will be started during the Spring or Summer.

FUR TRADE MOVING TO SEVENTH AVENUE

Important Building Operation for the Industry Projected for 27th Street.

OVER $1,000,000 INVOLVED

Pennsylvania Hotel Opening and Subway Completion Mean Much for Future Activity.

Seventh Avenue, now that the Pennsylvania Hotel has been successfully opened, is destined to play a more important part on the map of Manhattan Island than has been its history in the past. The completion of the Seventh Avenue subway and the extension of the lower part of the thoroughfare with Varick Street, now widened and recently repaved with granite block, have been achievements long awaited by realty owners and business interests on and adjacent to the avenue. Trade along its route below Times Square has already shown evidence of renewed activity, and the Pennsylvania Station zone, with its express subway station and mammoth hotel, is bound to develop in the near future as a highly important civic centre.

A commercial movement of considerable interest in the blocks immediately north of Twenty-third Street is now taking place which gives evidence of making that locality the new or uptown centre of the fur trade. One of the largest deals in some time in this vicinity recently closed was influenced by that fact, and plans are well under way for a large building operation involving an aggregate expenditure of practically $1,000,000.

The new structure will be erected on a frontage of over 170 feet at 237 to 251 West Twenty-seventh Street, directly in the rear of the old brewery buildings owned by M. Groh's sons and remodeled a few years ago as a warehouse for the cold storage of furs. The operation proved so successful that the Groh concern recently bought several old tenements at 237 to 243 West Twenty-seventh Street from Julia S. Kirby, whose family owned the property since 1851. One month ago they acquired the houses to the west, extending to 251, giving them one of the largest parcels in an individual ownership in that locality, as their Twenty-eighth Street property, directly in the rear, consisting of the old brewery and other buildings have a frontage of 174.6 feet.

The entire Twenty-seventh Street portion will be improved with a twelve-story warehouse, and an old building in the rear of the Grohs' executive offices at 238 and 240 West Twenty-eighth Street will also be added to the contemplated improvement. All of the Twenty-seventh Street tenements have been leased on short terms, and the tenants in the three buildings at 245 to 249 have been ordered to vacate by March 1, when the work of demolition will begin. The remaining houses will be torn down by May 1, and it is the intention to have the new structure ready for occupancy by the Spring of 1920.

The structure will be called the Fur Merchants' Cold Storage Vaults, and will be leased exclusively to that trade. Several floors have already been contracted for by several of the large department stores. Plans have been made by Friedman, Robertson & Keeler, and they provide four elevators, extensive loading and unloading platforms, and a side driveway from street to street. The building will have some novel features, among which are three immense showrooms each 100 by 150 feet in area, one of which will be on the roof and entirely inclosed in glass, thus enabling the minutest examination of furs without artificial light. Façades of the building will be like a tall paneled wall, without any windows, and broken only by the driveway into the structure. This will be surmounted by two floors of show or examination rooms.

The enterprise is unique in that the new building will be conducted on a cooperative basis, that is, floors or sections of vaults will be sold by the owners, who have increased the capital of their business from $600,000 to $1,000,000.

The Twenty-eighth Street frontage will remain practically unchanged. The present warehouse there covers the plot from 242 to 246, being the old brewery remodeled into a six-story building. Adjoining it, at 248 to 250, is the ice plant, which will be retained.

J. P. Kissling of the realty firm of A. W. Miller & Co., who closed the sale of the Twenty-seventh Street property, believes that the fur trade will soon be well established in the Seventh Avenue area between Twenty-fourth to Thirty-first Streets.

"There has been a very noticeable northward migration from the old Broadway centre between Bleecker and Fourth Streets," he said. "The demand for store and loft space by small merchants on the avenue has shown a marked increase within the last few months and several leases have been made at rates considerably higher than could formerly be obtained for similar space. The willingness of the fur people to pay higher rates has crowded many of the old-time shopkeepers from their quarters and the movement will undoubtedly lead in the near future to several building operations such as will provide more satisfactory space with modern equipment."

There has been no noteworthy building work there since the completion shortly before the war of the sixteen-story addition to the big building of the National Cloak and Suit Company, which occupies the entire block front on the west side of Seventh Avenue from Twenty-fourth to Twenty-fifth Streets.

To Limit Furniture Van Rates.

The ordinance introduced at the instance of the Real Estate Owners' Protective Association through Alderman William P. Kenneally to limit the rates of the furniture moving van owners during moving seasons will shortly be brought before the Committee on Public Welfare of the Board of Aldermen and will no doubt be passed out for adoption.

Yearly there grows an increasing demand from the victimized moving tenants that some relief be granted them by the city against the hold-ups of these greedy van owners, who compel the payment of, in many instances, as much as $25 for a single load of furniture, even if moved from a distance of one city block.

COPENHAGEN, Feb. 2.—Dispatches from Helsingfors say refugees who have arrived there tell that following a revolt of former soldiers of the Russian Army in Petrograd the capital has been bombarded with artillery from Kronstadt.

Cannon and machine guns were used in the streets, which were strewn with many dead bodies.

The great fortress of Kronstadt is twenty miles west of Petrograd, at the head of the Gulf of Finland.

The Bolshevist forces were reported on Jan. 23 last in a dispatch from Helsingfors to be evacuating Petrograd and removing all their stores. Trotzky, the Bolshevist War Minister, was said to be transferring his headquarters to Nizhni-Novgorod.

American and British Troops Again Repulse Attack on Dvina River Front.

ARCHANGEL, Feb. 1, (Associated Press.)—While they have succeeded in capturing the Shenkursk and Taresevo sectors, the Bolsheviki are still unable to make any impression on the American and allied lines on the Dvina sector near Tulgas. For the second time within a week a night attack by the enemy there was repulsed by the Americans and the Scotch.

The latest attack occurred early Friday. The Bolsheviki stormed the upper Tulgas, but met with severe resistance from the American patrol, who, however, withdrew, giving their artillery a clean sweep of the village. The Americans killed twenty of the Bolsheviki and wounded twenty, and also took seven prisoners. The allied patrols on the Taresevo sector moved southward twelve miles without encountering the enemy.

The indications are that the Bolsheviki are not following the Americans on their line of retreat here, but are moving in the direction of the Dvina in an effort to cut off the Dvina and Vaga forces at a point north of the junction point of the two rivers.

Last night's fighting was carried out under a clear sky and in cold weather. During the fighting the Northern Lights flamed spectacularly.

SIBERIAN STABILITY SHOWN BY TAX RETURNS

Plan to Divide Land Among Peasants—Quick Aid for Railroad Urged.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—Reports received from the Russian Government at Omsk by the Russian committee in Paris, indicate that customs and excise receipts are increasing rapidly and that the Government even is able to collect taxes on realty.

This is regarded by Boris Bakhmeteff, the Russian Ambassador to the United States, and his associates as a sign of greatly increased stability in Siberia. The paying of taxes on real estate throughout Russia virtually has been suspended since the overthrow of the Imperial Government because of the uncertainty of ownership.

OMSK, Jan. 27, (Associated Press.)—M. Petroff, Minister of Agriculture, has announced that he has formulated a solution of the agrarian problem, whereby he will divide the land equitably among the peasants, giving small landholders a chance to extend their holdings on their merits. Report Ex-Emperor Charles Will Sue for a Divorce

ZURICH, Feb. 2.—The Prague Tageblatt is authority for the statement that former Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary intends to apply for a divorce.

Charles was married in 1911 to Princess Zita of Bourbon and Parma, an Italian. From the union have been born five children, four boys and a girl. At the time of the marriage Charles Joseph was an Archduke, and it was said that Emperor Francis Joseph looked askance on the match because of the ill-feeling between Austria and Italy.

In August, 1918, rumors of an estrangement between the Austrian rulers were widely current in Vienna. Credence was given reports that Zita was shielding and protecting Italians. It was said that the Emperor was impatient of his consort's reported pleadings for the Italians, and that he had quarreled with her. The rumor gained such vogue that an official denial was uttered at a Catholic mass meeting held in Vienna in the latter part of August, 1918.

BATTLE IMMINENT WITH BREMEN REDS

FIERCE DEFENSE PLANNED

Machine-Gun Nests Prepared by Spartacides—Parley Fails to Halt Troops.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 31, (via Copenhagen.)—All reports from places near Bremen agree that the Soldiers' and Workers' Council there and various classes of laborers are preparing for a sanguinary encounter with Colonel Gerstenberg's troops, now near that city.

The rebels have requisitioned all the motor cars in Bremen and have placed machine guns at all advantageous points in the suburbs. They have been distributing arms to workmen all night long, forming them into companies and posting them behind barricades and in public buildings.

They certainly seem determined to sell their lives as dearly as possible, for they cannot hope to resist the Government troops. What the rebels, however, seem to count on is the Government's well-known desire to avoid bloodshed if at all possible. In the case of Bremen it is said here that any weak attitude by the Government would be fatal, because if a compromise is made at Bremen Hamburg is sure to follow the example.

At 2 o'clock this morning four members of the Bremen Soldiers' and Workers' Council visited Gerstenberg's divisional headquarters asking that the march to Bremen be delayed until the People's Commissioners in Berlin, who had been communicated with, had given their decision. Colonel Gerstenberg and People's Commissioner Noske, however, declared that they would not be induced to delay unless the Bremen soldiers and workers submitted to immediate disarmament. This the Bremen negotiators declared to be impossible, and they returned without results.

Gerstenberg's division consists of all arms especially artillery, and including armored motor cars and airplanes. It left Berlin last Tuesday in eighteen successive trains. Adjutant Captain Danner says that the division will be employed everywhere it is necessary to enforce law with the aid of arms.

The division is now approaching Bremen on both sides of the Weser. Bloodshed will be avoided if possible, but only if the Bremen rebels consent to disarmament.

Rebels Occupy Bremen Buildings.

BERLIN, Feb. 1, (Associated Press.)—The rebels are reported to have occupied the City Hall at Bremen and other important buildings.

Majority Socialists among the shipyard laborers as well as the office employes have left the yards there. The Bremen organ of the Spartacides made a half-hearted attempt to induce the workingmen to wait for a more favorable time before striking, but without effect.

Advices indicate, however, that news of the advance of the Government troops has had a favorable effect and that the non-Spartacide elements generally are plucking up courage.

At Wilhemshaven and Hamburg conditions are reported to be improving.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—Fighting between the Spartacides and Government troops continues in Bremen, according to a Copenhagen dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company.

Fresh strikes have broken out at Stettin, which is without gas or water.

RESTRICTION ON BRITISH TRADE NOT PERMANENT

Control of Food and Raw Material Imports Necessary in Reconstruction.

AIMED AT NO ONE NATION

Officials Point Out That Competition Has Come from Others as Well as America.

SHOE MANUFACTURE CITED

Officials Explain Why British Firms Need Protection at This Time.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Feb. 1.—The British Government, THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learned today from an authoritative source, has no intention of pursuing an exclusionist policy with regard to the forty-nine articles at present permitted to be imported freely, but on which restrictions are again to be placed.

They fall into two classes. On one of these restrictions will be put from July 1. This class consists of food and raw materials, and the British Government contends that it is forced to subject these again to license on account of the international situation, as it is well known that there is a worldwide shortage in them and the general subject is under discussion today at Paris.

No one expects that it will be possible to dispense for some time with rationing food and raw materials by international agreement, and, it is said here, no one today can say how that rationing will be worked out. The British authorities feel that it is necessary to place a time limit on the present freedom, and that if they did not do so they might find themselves confronted with pleas that firms have entered into contracts which interfere with the restrictions and that they must be permitted to carry them out.

Therefore the present announcement, it is held, should be construed as meaning that business men who make long contracts now in these articles do so at their own peril. There will undoubtedly be importing licenses in them granted after July 1, but no one now can tell on what terms.

Deny Preparing for Protection.

Of the category of goods on which the freedom to import will cease on March 1 and which are of a more general character, the British Government does not deny that licenses will be reimposed in the interest of British manufacturers, but it declares that the restrictions will be considered merely as a temporary measure, and are not being imposed now with any thought of the possible adoption by Great Britain of a protective system.

That is a political question which will come up later. The restrictions are said to be a purely administrative measure to meet a great emergency.

Boots and shoes, it was explained to THE TIMES correspondent, formed a special case, and there were particular reasons why for a time the importation of American shoes should be prohibited absolutely. During the war England had to provide enormous quantities of footgear, not only for herself but for her allies. This was only possible by the Government taking over the entire trade, from the hides to the completed shoes. Official control is now over, but it is declared to be impossible for the British manufacturers to turn around quickly and produce goods for the general market.

Not Aimed at One Country.

As a matter of fact, the British authorities say that American manufacturers should not think that the policy is directed especially against them. English manufacturers have suffered during the war from competition of goods from certain other countries far more than from American manufactures.

For example, at one time it was thought that no great harm would be done if the restrictions were removed from the importation of bootlaces, but when one country proceeded to increase its importations from sixty to 1,200 tons the British bootlace men complained.

It is emphasized that there is no intention of shutting out all American importations even in those articles for which import licenses will be again asked on March 1. Recognized American importers will receive permission to bring in their goods and will have their supplies regulated with regard to their competitors in proportion to what they were importing before the war. During the period of greatest restriction, the authorities say, these well-established firms were always allowed to import what was known as "the trickle"—that is, just about enough goods to keep them going—and it is hoped that now they will be able to get a more substantial quantity.

Only firms which have not been importers to the British market are likely to find that the gates are closed to them. The British realize that this prevents proper elasticity of trade, but they argue that under the circumstances it is unfortunately necessary.

France to Legislate Against High Prices

PARIS, Feb. 2.—The Cabinet met this morning and examined into the subject of the increased cost of living. The Minister of Justice will introduce a bill in Parliament, with a request for extreme urgency in considering it, increasing the penalties for speculation and cornering foodstuffs. All such cases will be brought before courts-martial.

An illustration of the increase in the price of groceries is given in a bill which a poilu left unpaid at the beginning of the war. The total amount is 15 francs 85 centimes. He paid the bill and asked the grocer to make out the amount at the present prices. It proved to be 67 francs 5 centimes.

NEW PARLIAMENT FACES GIANT TASK

Work of Reconstruction Biggest Problem Britain Ever Had Except the War.

ALL EYES ON LLOYD GEORGE

Premier Confronted by Dual Undertaking of Making Peace and Instituting Reforms.

LONDON, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—No British Parliament in a century, except the Parliament of Premier Asquith, which had on its shoulders the responsibility of deciding whether Great Britain would enter the war, ever met with more important work to be dealt with than the House of Commons of Premier Lloyd George will find when it holds its first meeting on Tuesday.

All the problems of the new House may be summarized in the one word—reconstruction.

This is peculiarly a one man and a personal House of Commons, since its ruling power is not a political party but a coalition group whose members represent widely different schools and which depends for its guidance upon the personal leadership of the Premier rather than putting into effect any party platform. Premier Lloyd George is in Paris, and he must stay there. No one expects him to leave the Peace Conference. He has the double burden of directing Great Britain's destinies in foreign and imperial affairs and in keeping a hand on the domestic policy, and at this time of real crisis no one expects him to leave the Peace Conference.

Leadership in the two Houses of Parliament, therefore, for the time being will fall upon Earl Curson and Andrew Bonar Law, both of whom are Conservatives, and before the war stood for almost everything that was opposed to Lloyd George and his present program. That seems to mean that Parliament will mark time until the Prime Minister can return and take charge in person.

Labor Elements Impatient.

Meanwhile, the problems of domestic reconstruction are not marking time and refuse to wait even until the more urgent business of world reconstruction has been settled in Paris. Many persons predicted that there would be labor troubles in the United Kingdom after the war, but very few, if any, foresaw that they would be thrust upon the country so quickly and so sharply.

The working classes and the plain people were told that after the war there would be "a better life" for the masses. Apparently they expect and demand that "better life" sooner than the Government is prepared to take in hand the business of constructing the new era.

There are as many explanations for the present industrial unrest as there are points of view. Some say that the workingmen are uneasy and restless and that the strikes are merely a sort of holiday effervescence and are not to be taken as serious symptoms of any labor policies. Another and extreme point of view is that the British people are infected by the general world movement, which is roughly described as Bolshevism, and that the foundations of society are threatened.

Among other explanations are that the laborers have real grievances which they endured patiently during the war and that they have only waited until the ship of state was out of troubled waters to press their own interests, and that the laborers fear that their jobs will be endangered by the demobilization of hundreds of thousands from the army and are agitating for shorter hours with the idea that shorter hours will be the only solution of the need of work for all.

The strikes in Belfast and Glasgow have several new features. Instead of merely striking against their employers and confining the battle to the familiar campaign of men against masters the strikers are disrupting the nerve centres of their communities. The strikes entail not only the stoppage of work in certain industries, but are paralyzing the everyday life of the cities. Transportation, lighting, and power for manufacturing are the vital arteries of normal living which the strikers and their sympathizers are putting at a standstill. This makes entire communities suffer on account of the disputes of a fraction of their citizens, and none suffer more than the poor people and the middle classes.

Belfast Employers Blamed.

Sympathies are divided regarding the merits of these strikes. As usual, there are some who say that the Belfast shipbuilding employers are "masters" of the old-time employing caste whose only method is "take it or leave it," and who might have averted trouble by a little diplomacy and a spirit of give and take. Others contend that the workmen have struck without giving reasonable notice and with lack of ability to see two sides of any quarrel.

The Government up to this time has followed a line of nonintervention, but in the end the whole matter of industrial conditions will be involved in the legislation for reconstruction. The responsibility for carrying this out rests chiefly upon the Prime Minister, and there are indications that he will not be slow to grapple with it. There is question whether the Premier can command his party in the House of Commons, which is a personal party as few before have been.

In the question which the country is asking the only doubts are based on the fact that a majority of the members of that party are conservatives. On his last visit to Wales, and plainly in reply to these questionings, Mr. Lloyd George said to a gathering of his constituents:

"May my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth if I forget my liberal principles."

Upon whether the Premier can lead his conservative allies or whether they will stifle his liberal principles depends the course of reconstruction during the next few months.

DISCUSS LEAGUE CONSTITUTION TODAY; LIMIT ON ARMAMENTS IS FAVORED; NATIONS' MAXIMUM CLAIMS SET FORTH

SUMMARY OF ALLIED AIMS

Territorial Ambitions Which Will Be Laid Before the Conference.

FRENCH FOR BUFFER STATES

As Part of Plan for Protecting Their Frontier Against German Aggression.

BRITAIN'S MANDATORY ROLE

Hopes to Hold German Colonies for Dominions—Neutrals Also to Press Claims.

PARIS, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—The delegates of the five great Powers are now in a position to compare clearly their own aspirations and those of all their allies and to see the differences that must be reconciled. The maximum of hopes, often overlapping, has been expressed freely, and it remains for the Peace Conference to adjust them into a co-ordinated whole. The desires of the several countries as presented may be summarized thus:

FRANCE.

France wants first of all, Alsace-Lorraine unconditionally and the right to discuss and ultimately to fix the French frontiers in their relation to the Rhine, which may require the creation of buffer States. One of these would be the Palatinate, and another Rhenish Prussia. France desires also to annex the basin of the Sarre River, which might be called a re-annexation.

France will insist that so far as the left bank of the Rhine farther to the north is concerned, the Conference shall forbid military works of any kind—barracks, bridgeheads, forts and fortresses—in that zone. The feeling is that the people inhabiting that zone should be free to decide for themselves whether they wish to join France, form an independent State or return to Germany.

The French bill for reparation is not yet complete, but it has been announced in the Chamber of Deputies that it will be about 66,000,000,000 francs.

The French Government does not ask for a protectorate in Syria in the ordinary sense, because it considers that the population there is too advanced to make a protectorate necessary; but France, on account of her traditional interests in that country, feels that she should be called upon to exercise some sort of guardianship or guidance until Syria is fully able to govern herself.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Great Britain's delegation believes that a Society of Nations is desirable and obtainable, and that it must be established by the present Peace Conference. She advances no Continental demands other than that a permanent and just peace be concluded, and that under the principle of self-determination there shall be international freedom of transit by railroads and waterways, which is Great Britain's general definition of freedom of commerce in times of peace.

Great Britain proposes to take mandatory power over the German islands south of the equator for Australia and over German Southwest Africa for the Union of South Africa. She also expects to have the mandate over German East Africa and some parts of Arabia, and she has particular claims in this respect over Mesopotamia. Great Britain will enter a pool with the other Allies in the matter of indemnities, especially reparation for air raid damages and shipping losses.

ITALY.

Italy asks for the Trentino as far as the Brenner Pass, including the whole of Southern Tyrol, Trieste, Istria, Fiume, Zara, Sebenico, the larger part of the Dalmatian Islands, Avlona and its hinterland; a protectorate over Albania; possession of the islands in the Aegean which were taken from Turkey in the Tripolitan war, and the province of Adalia if France and England take territory in Asia Minor.

The Italian contention is that the Dalmatian Islands and such parts of the Dalmatian coast as are not assigned to Italy shall be neutralized. Should France and England extend their colonial possessions in Africa, Italy desires to enlarge her possessions in Eritrea and Tripoli.

RUMANIA.

Territorial contentions in the Balkans are complicated and present difficult problems. Rumania desires to retain possession of that portion of Russian Bessarabia given her by the Central Powers under the canceled treaty of Bucharest and now in her possession. Rumania also desires Southern Dobrudja as ceded to her by Bulgaria after the second Balkan war. Possession of Bessarabia and the Dobrudja commands the mouth of the Danube.

To the westward Rumania wants to annex the Hapsburg provinces of Bukowina and Transylvania and a considerable part of the rich agricultural dis-

League Constitution as Tentatively Drawn Follows the General Form of Our Own

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—An American conference was held tonight over the tentative draft of the Constitution of the League of Nations, which will be the basis of a series of discussions, beginning tomorrow, with other members of the League of Nations Commission.

The Constitution, as drawn, consists of a preamble and twenty-two articles, which follow the general form of the American Constitution. The preamble says: "The nations of the world agree to sign a covenant to promote closer relations between the peoples of the world, so as to obtain complete respect for treaty obligations to insure the world's peace."

This Constitution, which, in order to give it a binding effect, will be incorporated in the peace treaty, will cover a space corresponding to three newspaper columns in its present shape, but is subject to revision.

Confidence continues among Americans that an agreement is certain, and they are now inclined to believe that a few days of discussion will bring complete harmonization of views.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—President Wilson will officially assemble at the Hotel de Crillon on Monday afternoon the members of the Peace Conference Commission on a Society of Nations. In some quarters it is reported that a report to the conference on this subject is imminent.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—Although France, in common with the other big powers, accepts provisionally the Wilson mandatory principle as to the German colonies, she does not like it. The conditions under which she indorses it are so vague that the door is left wide open for her to repudiate it if she does not approve its concrete application. But in the French press, which speaks the wishes of Clemenceau and Pichon, rather than the avowed utterances of those statesmen themselves, this real attitude is indicated.

For example, several Paris papers make a hero and a martyr out of Premier Hughes of Australia because of his stubborn fight against the Wilson mandatory principle as applied to New Guinea. Le Matin this morning had a long article by Stephane Lauzanne on the Hughes fight, the printing of which is significant as a protest against the American attitude on this phase of the peace making.

"He has begun an ardent, tenacious fight on the question of the German colonies in the Pacific," writes Lauzanne of Hughes. "He is of those who demand the immediate liquidation and attribution of these colonies. He is not at all sure he has lost his fight. He certainly does not admit himself beaten."

Lauzanne then quotes Hughes as follows:

"We have no objection in Australia to the mandate principle, but let the mandate define immediately what it gives and requires. You offer to rent a house and ask the price and responsibilities, whereupon you are told that will be determined by a council to convene one, two, or three years hence. So, until then, you can know nothing of what you pay or the rules regulating you.

"That is no solution of this German colony problem. I will not subscribe to it. We have already at the Quai d'Orsay a League of Nations capable of deciding these questions.

"We have had more losses than America with her 100,000,000 people. When we have been asked to sacrifice ourselves in battle we did not demand the organization of an international tribune to decide the matter. But now, after our people have paid with their lives to save the world, without hesitation, argument or chicanery, we find a new form of procedure for reimpursing damages.

"It is something slow and vague. We are told it is not now the fate of the world that is to be decided. That is to come later.

"We will not await a League of Nations that is to be born nobody knows when, where or how.

"It is often said that those far away on the other side of the world did not appreciate immediately the grandeur of the cause for which we began fighting in 1914. Australia is far away, but she understood immediately and sacrificed herself from the start. It was not at the eleventh hour that we came to the defense of civilization. We armed a tenth part of our male population of five millions.

"The arbiters, I know not who, are converging I know not where, coming I know not whence."

In his own comment on this statement from Hughes, Lauzanne calls it an echo of the voice of the world.

INDIA READY TO AID IN COLONIAL RULE

Will Present to Peace Conference Her Special Interests in East Africa.

SENDS TWO NATIVE ENVOYS

Maharajah of Bikanear and Lord Sinha Tell of the National Aspirations.

By ERNEST MARSHALL.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—Under the "satisfactory provisional arrangement," regarding the disposition of the former German colonies come to last Thursday, South Africa remains in the control of German East Africa. In regard to this particular territory, however, it is believed that the French proverb which declares that "it is the provisional that endures" is highly likely to be disproved.

Portugal and Belgium have certain claims and the Empire of India also has special interests which will be put forward for consideration at the proper time.

The question of the final disposition of German Southwest Africa may be included in the discussions which are expected to take place this week upon the subject of the Turkish dominions in occupation of the Allies. The whole question will have peculiar interest for America, for it is believed that America's views on the point of how far she is ready to go in the way of bearing burdens of a mandatory power will be one of the determining factors of the settlement.

While Britain, for instance, is prepared to accept from the Peace Conference the task of policing and administering Mesopotamia for the league, it is a matter of much speculation whether the United States will undertake a similar duty in regard to other sections of the Turkish dominions and thereby solve the difficulties presented by the rival national claims of France, Italy and Greece.

Indian Envoys in Paris.

The Indian administration is understood to be ready to come to the assistance of the British crown in meeting the financial and other obligations which the trusteeships will entail. In this connection it is of interest to state that the Indian Empire is represented in Paris not only by the Secretary of State for India, but also by two delegates who have come to Europe especially to attend the conference. These two delegates are Major General His Highness the Maharajah of Bikanir and Right Hon. Lord Sinha, K. C.

The Maharajah is the representative of many Indian princes who, while proud of their position within the Indian Empire, are at the same time jealous of their position of independence within their own territories, which is secured to them by treaties with the British Government concluded by their ancestors. Lord Sinha, on the other hand, is a representative of those areas administered directly by the Government of India. The appointment of Lord Sinha as Under Secretary of State for India in the British Ministry recently formed, with PARIS, Feb. 2.—History was made in Paris last week. History will be made here in the week just begun. It was on Jan. 25 that the League of Nations was born, and in the week intervening its sponsors have been trying to find clothing to fit this much-advertised infant. They have provided part of the wardrobe, and are confident that they will obtain the rest before President Wilson departs for the United States.

It was in the effort to clothe the infant adequately and becomingly that the history was made. A complete outfit is lacking, but the peacemakers have made progress in a way that would probably astonish those influenced by the reports of serious troubles among them over the League of Nations plan.

As was told in my wireless dispatch Saturday night, a remarkable advance toward complete agreement has been made, and I am now able to give in greater detail the scope and character of that advance.

The action taken by the full Peace Conference on Jan. 25 was merely to indorse the principle of the league. This left the plenipotentiaries of the great powers to work out the details which should make the league a concrete, practical thing; and, as everybody knows, details are rocks upon which the international ship is likely to come to grief. Curiously and surprisingly enough, the obstacles that seemed insurmountable to many yielded to what we Americans call the "get-together spirit" displayed by the able men who undertook the task of setting the league upon its feet.

Our reading about the Congress of Vienna tells us that it was not a real congress at all, but a series of private councils in which the various sovereigns and their advisers got together and remade the map of Europe. These episodes of secret diplomacy, which resulted in so much harm and which furnished the foundation for bitterness that had not disappeared when the greatest war began in 1914, have been condemned vigorously, and never more so than in the few weeks since hostilities between the allied nations and the Central Powers ended and arrangements for peace were undertaken.

The Objection to Secrecy.

But, while we are ever ready to condemn the private understandings reached at Vienna more than a century ago because of the secrecy employed, it is asserted that the progress made toward the ultimate success of the League of Nations has been due very largely to oral exchanges between little groups meeting here in Paris behind closed doors. The objection to this method is that it prevents the people most concerned from knowing to what their representatives are committing them. However, since secrecy is the watchword of the Peace Conference and must be tolerated by the public, it is contended that this method has produced greater results than would that of having a large number of men gather formally and enter into general discussion. Many men would have meant many views, many words, many digressions, many hours wasted. So the experiment of having two or three meet and thresh out their ideas was resorted to. These two or three joined issue until, when the combined groups met, it was shown that the differences had been harmonized and worrisome obstacles had been overcome.

These combined groups comprised the members of the commission appointed by the conference to draft a formula for the Society of Nations. It included President Wilson and Colonel House for America, Lord Robert Cecil and General Smuts for Great Britain, Léon Bourgeois and M. Larnaude for France, and Premier Orlando and Senator Scialoja for Italy. Japan was also represented, but the Japanese have taken little part in the discussion of the league proposals, and their attitude is still somewhat of a mystery.

Each national unit on this commission made it its business to consult separately with the national units of other powers, and as a consequence a pretty clear understanding had been reached on many points prior to the formal gathering of the entire commission. The work done in this connection is bound to stand out as a record of remarkable accomplishment if the veil of official secrecy which envelops the peace negotiations is ever lifted authoritatively.

Upon Colonel House as the active representative of President Wilson's views concerning the league fell the burden of this work of harmonizing conflicting views. As the President's alter ego he has been the busiest man in Paris for a week past. He had just recovered from a rather severe illness, and if he is thinner and paler as a consequence of his strenuous exertions, he has a right to be happier.

Entering the Homestretch Today.

Tomorrow the League of Nations Commission expects to enter upon the homestretch of its work. It will have before it in black and white the tentative—what is called the working—formula for the organization of the league which will define its functions and set forth its objects. In my wireless dispatch Saturday night I told some of the most important things that had been agreed upon by the negotiators. These included a tentative agreement to abolish military conscription, the reduction of land and naval armaments, with a provision forbidding the use of the submarine as a weapon of war, and the application of an economic boycott as a means of disciplining nations violating the principles and regulations of the league.

I am able to add something in the way of explanation to the brief outline given in that dispatch.

Financial considerations had much—not most—to do with bringing about the agreements reached by the representatives of the Governments which have been engaged in the effort to work out a formula for the League of Nations. The war has left all the belligerents huge debts, which some find it difficult to carry. In these circumstances they are obliged to consider ways and means for reducing, or at least preventing, an increase of heavy taxation imposed on the people. Take Great Britain, for example. She finds herself with a debt of $40,000,000,000. The interest on this amount at 5 per cent. is $2,000,000,000. Add to that another billion for annual expenses and it is seen that the British Government is obliged to raise $3,000,000,000 annually. That would not include provision for the naval and military expansion which confronted the European nations when the constant fear of a great war was on them. Other belligerent countries find themselves in the same situation. The war has left them poorer as Governments, with grave problems of finance confronting them. It is easy to see that they are willing to adopt measures through joint agreement that will save money. One way of saving is providing against a race between Governments in building up armaments.

This is the reason why the proposal for the curtailment of naval building programs and the elimination of great armies appeared to those gathered to discuss ways of making the League of Nations a practical thing. It will probably surprise many people to hear that Great Britain is quite sympathetic to the proposal to reduce naval armaments; but a little reflection will bring back to memory the efforts made ever since Winston Churchill's day as First Lord of the Admiralty, seven years ago, to induce Germany to enter into a mutual arrangement for a "breathing spell" in the construction of warships. That effort failed—a circumstance which the German rulers, with their fleet not daring to take a chance against the powerful naval force of Great Britain, must have mulled over sorrowfully during the period of the war.

Naval Curtailment Certain.

Great Britain is still only too willing to perfect the arrangement suggested to Germany, and in this she has found ready acquiescence on the part of the American representatives at the Peace Conference. The terms of the arrangement are not disclosed, because, for one reason, all the details are not yet worked out; but it is assured that a naval curtailment provision will be written into the peace treaty.

As has been told in Paris dispatches to THE NEW YORK TIMES, the United States, while willing to agree that naval armaments be curtailed, contends that the American Government is entitled to build as many warships as any other. This means the United States will have no restrictions placed on its building program up to the number of vessels which Great Britain, for example, will be privileged to construct. Peace agitators may work out a sliding scale of naval construction, but, whatever arrangement is made, the United States will hold that its long coast line, its remoteness from its insular possessions, and the great increase in its merchant marine, entitle it to have as large a fleet as any other nation.

But beyond these considerations, the United States will stand on the principle that the fundamental doctrine of the League of Nations is that no one nation shall be so powerful as to be able to control the seas alone. As I pointed out in a previous dispatch, this contention is based merely on principle, and the argument that it applies directly to Great Britain falls before the complete understanding between the American and British representatives that it is unthinkable that either fleet should ever be used against the other.

In line with the harmony of the views of Great Britain, France, Italy, and the United States that provision be made for curtailing naval programs is the general willingness that the use of the submarine as a weapon of war should be expressly forbidden. President Wilson has been firmly of the opinion that the submarine had no place in civilized warfare. In this he has found support from British statesmen, and when the League of Nations Commission meets tomorrow it will give consideration to the direct proposal contained in the draft of the league formula which will form the basis for discussion that the submarine shall pass into history.

The Question of Conscription.

Financial considerations will have a large influence, also, in the attention which the League Commission will give to the proposal to abolish conscription. The resort to raising armies by voluntary enlistment means a great reduction in military establishments. Great Britain and the United States are as one in this matter.

The attitude of France is not clearly known. Italy, while sympathetic, has expressed fear that the volunteer system will prove more expensive than conscription. Her uncertainty is based on the feeling that men will not volunteer without attractive inducements as to pay. One point to be considered is that an American private soldier receives as much pay as an Italian Second Lieutenant. However, this attitude on Italy's part is not unbending, for throughout the negotiations the Italian representatives have shown an interest and willingness that is encouraging to the effort to make the League of Nations a going concern. Their objection is merely put forward as a suggestion for the serious consideration of the league commission. The answer, which will probably be accepted, will be found in arrangements that will insure Italy from danger through the requirement that her enemies be obliged to keep their armies at a strength which will remove the menace that has existed for so many years.

The League of Nations agreement will recognize the principle of no annexations and the application of a system of mandatories under which all colonial territory and some other acquired from the enemy will be placed in the custody of the league and administered by States or selected by the people of the former enemy possessions designated by the league. Some fear was expressed that the draft of the provision to carry out these principles might be construed as placing the Trentino and perhaps Alsace-Lorraine in custody of the league, but there is no such intention. These territories are regarded by the Allies as invaded areas, like Belgium and Northern France, and are to be returned of right to the countries from which they were taken by conquest. The league formula will provide against any misunderstanding in this particular.

No Supersovereignty.

Supersovereignty of the league over any nation will not be recognized in the formula. The league will be a mutual concern which will leave every member free to follow its own course should occasion arise when a majority of the members believe the use of force essential to bring a recalcitrant Government to order. This disposes of the suggestion that there will be an international police fleet or executive body of the league which will have power to issue directions to the league as a whole.

Some arrangement is sought, however, that will virtually bind all nations to resort to a peaceful economic boycott to reduce a recalcitrant member to submit to the league's proposal for the adjustment of its difficulties with another member. Present indications are that an agreement of this sort is in sight.

Whether the league will have a permanent executive body resident in some particular city or will maintain its permanent organization merely through a secretariat has not been fully determined. It is believed that the attitude of the United States inclines toward having a permanent executive body. A compromise for such an arrangement may be reached through an agreement that the diplomatic representatives of the league members at the headquarters of the secretariat shall be members of the Executive Council, with the privilege extended to any nation to appoint a special plenipotentiary to represent it in place of its regular diplomatic agent.

HEARS WILSON FAVORS SOCIALIST PASSPORTS

President Said to Believe They Might Aid League by Going to Berne.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—An interesting situation has arisen through the refusal of Samuel Gompers to attend the Socialist and trade union convention at Berne. Mr. Gompers, who with Edward N. Hurley represents the United States on the commission to draft an international labor agreement for the approval of the Peace Conference, was unanimously chosen Chairman of the commission.

According to a well authenticated report President Wilson desired Mr. Gompers to go to Berne to obtain support of the trade unionists for the League of Nations plan. Mr. Gompers's refusal was on the ground that German delegates were to attend.

It is rumored that the President is contemplating instructing Acting Secretary Polk to issue passports to a delegation.

CHILDREN TELL OF WILSON.

French Girls in School Compositions Show Ardent Admiration.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Company.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—Even the children of France are so interested in the visit of President Wilson that they have formed their own opinions of his characteristics. One of my friends, a teacher in a little girls' school, wanted to find out what her pupils really thought. She gave them the following subject for a composition the other day:

"Describe President Wilson. Give your ideas about him."

She has just shown me some of the answers.

One little girl begins: "Oh, I have seen very often the President Wilson. My papa nailed his picture on the wall th elast time he was home on permission."

Another describes him thus: "He smiles all the time. He has long cheeks and a big chin without any beard. That is so little children may have all the more place to kiss him."

Still another little girl writes, very seriously: "The President Wilson does not drink any wine. When he drinks toasts with the President of our Republic he lifts his glass full of clear water. I showed to my papa the paper in which this was said. I wish my papa would drink water like the President Wilson."

One poor little girl writes: "I could not envy him for being rich, because he does not crush down any one with his riches. When he goes to mass he does not sit in the front row, and when he goes on promenade it annoys him to be guarded like a King."

And here is something which shows that little girls are not so very ignorant of political affairs: "It is the President Wilson, who, without anyone guessing it, manages everybody in the Peace Conference. It is he who thought of inviting the Russians, forgotten by everybody else. The President Wilson is father to the Society of Nations. It is an association established by the people of all countries so there may be no more war."

One girl declares: "It is his wife who must be proud to have married him."

Another expresses this unusual desire: "I would like to be the daughter of the concierge of President Wilson."

Perhaps the most touching wish of all is that of a little girl of eleven: "I wish that President Wilson would never die."

WILSON WINNING BY EARNESTNESS

Went to Paris with League of Nations Plan Complete and Has Not Budged.

PRAISE FOR HIS LEADERSHIP

He Asks Great Sacrifices, But Is Getting Them—America Expected to Share in These.

By CHARLES H. GRASTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Feb. 1.—From good English sources, favorable to a League of Nations, information comes that the Peace Conference now is facing its crucial test. "We are at the parting of the ways," said one informant. "One road leads to settlement in accordance with the Wilsonian doctrine of abstract justice, and the other to dealing with the situation fairly, but in accordance with pre-existing conditions and separate national interests, and susceptibilities.

"The question of the German colonies has brought the Wilson plan down to a practical, concrete basis for the first time. Lloyd George bravely went to the mat with Premier Hughes of Australia on this question, and apparently the Wilson plan has stood its first trying-out successfully.

"But this is only one test, and the fate of the real League of Nations, the complete sceheme of which President Wilson brought over in his satchel and which has remained practically unchanged throughout all the conversation and consultation, is still to be fought out.

"The President has carefully avoided friction and has played his cards with consummate style. In a sense it is Wilson against the field. Only Wilson among all the leaders brings earnest conviction to the epoch-making plan of the League of Nations. He alone insists upon the uncompromising application of the rule of right. While listening to all opinions and conducting all discussions in a spirit of deference, and with every appearance of receptivity, he has not budged from his main ground.

"He is out to gain a stupendous reform in world methods, and nothing less will satisfy him. There is nobody in the Conference who sincerely wants to go the whole distance with him. He stands alone. But he is strong in himself and in the power of his great country. His ideas are definite and clean-cut. He possesses the highest gifts of mind and speech. There is no end to his energy, patience and wisdom. He has the crusader's spirit, with courteous manners, and, finally, he has boldness. He will risk all to gain all. Such a man will go far.

"The President has been criticised for not showing his hand. He has been wise to wait. A plan so sweeping would cause misunderstanding and bewilderment if suddenly presented to minds unprepared for it. Those of us who have watched developments from the inside and sympathetically feel that Wilson has handled his cause masterfully. If he fails it will not be because of bad management or faulty leadership.

"We shall soon see whether the heads of other Governments can make the individual sacrifices necessary to carrying out the Wilsonian program. It is a pay-as-you-enter proposition which is asking a good deal of the old line politicians. Everybody must give up a whole lot. In this sacrifice America must share."

trict of the Banat of Temesvar. It is here that the Rumanian aspirations conflict with those of Serbia, which affirms that under her war agreements with the Entente she should have a large portion of the Banat as well as other sections of former Austria-Hungary adjoining old Serbia to the north to rcund out the proposed Jugoslav State. Both Rumania and Serbia have moved troops into the Banat to secure their claims, and French troops have established a neutral zone to prevent hostilities between them.

SERBIA.

Serbia's claims to take from the Hapsburg monarchy the Provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina are opposed by no one in the Entente group. The plans for the incorporation into Jugoslavia of the Hapsburg province of Croatia, except as to the coastal region of Fiume, are also considered as subject to the internal decision of the Southern Slavs.

Jugoslav and Italian aims are in sharp conflict in the settlement of the Adriatic coast problem, involving the future of Fiume and the Croatian seaboard, along with the Dalmatian and Albanian Islands. The union of Montenegro and Serbia as part of a greater Jugoslav State has been voted by the Montenegrin Parliament, but the faction representing King Nicholas and his adherents protests against a union which shall not leave to Montenegro entire local self-government. There is also a conflict between the plans of Jugoslav statesmen and those of Czechoslovakia, who desire a wide corridor from Bohemia to the Adriatic to Hungary and Croatia to secure an outlet to the sea.

GREECE.

Greece wishes Northern Epirus and Thrace, with the exception of Constantinople and the shores of the Bosporus and the Dardanelles, which Premier Venizelos wishes to place under international control. Greece asks for the vilayet of Smyrna, in Asia Minor, and the former Turkish islands in the Eastern Mediterranean, including those known as the Dodecanesus, claimed by Italy.

BULGARIA.

Although Bulgaria capitulated without conditions and her future extent depends upon the conquerors, her Government has not abandoned hope of adding extensive territories, and even hopes to receive extensions of the Bulgarian frontiers in Southern Macedonia along the Aegean coast and in Thrace.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA.

The new State of Czechoslovakia is carving out its territories almost entirely at the expense of the old Austria-Hungary. The old kingdom of Bohemia, Moravia, and the Slovak regions of Northern Hungary have already been incorporated into the proposed State, but there are certain conflicts with the Poles, Ruthenians, Rumanians, and Germans, as well as with the Austrians and the Magyars, because the Czechs assert that parts of German Saxony and German Silesia belong ethnographically to the new State.

The Czechoslovaks are coming into opposition to Polish claims in Silesia and sections of Galicia, while to the northeast Czechoslovak expansion has brought them into contact with the Ruthenians, or Ukrainians, in Eastern Galicia, and with other fringes of spheres claimed by the Rumanians. The new State desires expansion southward over a frontage on the Danube and over a corridor to the Adriatic.

POLAND.

The Poles, with an inadequate army, are endeavoring to establish possession of disputed regions on three sides of Russian Poland and Galicia, which constitutes the nucleus of the new Polish State. The Poles desire Eastern Galicia to include Lemberg, which is in the Ukraine, and the disputed Province of Cholm, in Little Russia.

To the northeast the Poles desire to have Vilna recognized as Polish. Both the Lithuanians and the Bolsheviki have raised claims to Vilna, the Bolsheviki supporting their pretensions by a menacing offensive. The Poles are contending against the Germans not only for German Silesia and Posen and West Prussia, as provinces populated chiefly by Poles, but also for the City of Danzig, so as to provide Poland with direct access to the sea.

Should the Poles have Danzig, East Prussia would be cut off from the rest of Germany and would remain an island populated by Germans surrounded by Polish dominions.

BELGIUM.

Belgium asks that her reparation for damages wrought by Germany shall be the first lien upon German assets to the extent of at least 15,000,000,000 francs, or up to a much larger sum if Germany does not return the machinery and the materials taken from Belgium. Belgium believes that she should be paid first because she was the first to be invaded, because her neutrality was violated and because she has suffered more from despoliation than any other country in the war.

Belgium, which has reasserted her independence and thus emerges from her old state of neutrality, desires from Holland the left bank of the Scheldt and the peninsula of Maastricht, which protrudes into Belgian Limburg. Belgium is also ready to assent to a plebiscite in Luxemburg to decide whether that country wishes to join Belgium or France or to retain its autonomy.

The foregoing may be considered the extreme claims of Belgium. They come into conflict with Holland, which resists any infringement of the frontiers asked for by the Belgian annexationists. The Government of Holland appears willing to revise the Scheldt navigation treaty so that Belgium shall enjoy equal rights in the river with Holland.

JAPAN.

Japan enters the Peace Conference, as Baron Makino, the senior delegate, has said, "with no territorial ambitions in China," while as for Tsing Tao, "she will hand it back to China under the terms of the notes exchanged between China and Japan in May, 1915." This is interpreted by Japan as permitting her to retain certain former German concessions on the Shantung Peninsula. Japan, Baron Makino explains, "neither intends nor desires to interfere in Russian affairs, but is willing, if solicited, to aid Russia in restoring order.

These declarations dispose of two of the main questions in which Japan is interested, except that she desires to retain the southern Pacific islands north of the equator which formerly belonged to Germany.

CHINA.

The Chinese delegates ask to be guaranteed from foreign imperialism or aggression and desire the gradual abolition of "consular rights" and to be allowed to impose higher duties on importations. The Chinese also ask for the return of Kiao-Chau.

SWITZERLAND.

Switzerland appears to be the only neutral State which has so far presented her desires to the Peace Conference. The Swiss Government has represented that, while Switzerland would be glad to participate in a Society of Nations, yet because of her mixed nationalities she could not do so if that should mean the use of her troops in policing the world by force, as, perhaps, against Italy, France, or Germany.

Switzerland desires an outlet to the sea by the Rhine, which she wishes to have declared a neutral stream. This is in accord with French desires, since, if Alsace-Lorraine become French from Basle northward and an independent buffer state is erected out of the Palatinate and Rhenish Prussia, as suggested by Marshal Foch, it will be necessary to neutralize the Rhine.

SCANDINAVIA.

The territorial aspirations of the three Scandinavian powers are considered modest. Denmark wishes to annex that part of northern Schleswig inhabited predominantly by Danes, but has not asked to regain the provinces of Schleswig and Holstein taken from Denmark by Prussia in the war of 1864 or to extend her frontiers southward to the Kiel Canal.

Norway has certain aspirations to Spitzbergen, or a part of it, but is not pressing these claims energetically.

A strong Socialist movement in Sweden favors the union with Sweden of the Aland Islands, which are regarded by the Swedes as the naval key to Stockholm. Swedish interests in this connection are in conflict with those of Finland. Sovereignty over the islands has belonged to Finland since the fall of the Russian Imperial Government. Nothing has been heard since the collapse of Germany of earlier Finnish plans to obtain an outlet by the annexation of parts of Russian Karelia, lying between Finland and the Murman coast, and even of adjacent Finmark, which belongs to Norway. This contention on the part of Finland led to the landing of allied troops at Murmansk to prevent the establishment of a German submarine base in the northern seas.

The delegates of the five powers who will straighten out this tangle of rival interests are obliged also to take into consideration the passionate racial claims as well as the history of all Europe for centuries.

PRESIDENT FORCED TO REST ON SUNDAY

Even Stayed from Church, on His Physician's Advice—Busy at Typewriter Saturday.

PARIS, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—President Wilson on this Sunday had his first completely restful day since he landed on French soil. Rear Admiral Grayson, his medical aide, was able to have his way in this respect, having in mind the exceedingly hard work which marked every day last week, and the serious departure from the regimen which has so well preserved the health and strength of the President up to this moment. The President was even induced to refrain from his almost invariable custom of attending church, in order to regain vitality which had been sacrificed.

The progress made last week in the work of the Peace Conference through the daily sessions of the council of the five great powers has encouraged the hope and expectation that the main object, the society of nations, will be so far advanced toward realization that it will be possible to get it before the Peace Conference in plenary session in time to permit of its adoption by the middle of next month, which will enable the President to carry out his original idea of leaving for Washington about the date previously fixed.

President Wilson spent most of Saturday morning at work in his private office. Instead of availing himself of the services of a stenographer he applied himself assiduously to the typewriter, which fact is taken as an indication that he was preparing some paper requiring the most thoughtful consideration. As it is known to be the plan of the American delegation to rush forward plans for the creation of a Society of Nations, it is assumed that the President, who is a member of the special commission charged with that project, was engaged in the preparation of some statement supporting some one proposition or general scheme.

SCENTS WILSON'S AMBITION.

London Paper Says He Wants Prestige of Solving Colonial Problems.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—Discussing the colonial questions before the Peace Conference, the political correspondent of the Sunday Times says:

"President Wilson's proposals were undoubtedly something of a bombshell. His motive is, of course, by no means cryptic. America expects him to return, bringing his sheaves with him in the shape of diplomatic triumphs, and his personal prestige and chances of re-election would be immensely enhanced if he would impose his scheme of mandatory government on the Conference.

"So skillful an electioneer as Lloyd George could not but have a touch of sympathy with this attitude, and accordingly he has busied himself to find a formula which would both minister to the President's ambition and appease the demand of the overseas statesmen that the sacrifices the Colonies have made in the war shall not be without material reward. Obviously this was an exigent task, but the Prime Minister knows how to juggle with words, and there is reason to believe a modus vivendi is in the way of arrangement."

PROGRESS PLEASES BRITISH DELEGATES

Colonials Expect League of Nations, When Formed, to Accept Existing Situation.

PARIS, Feb. 1.—Lloyd George's impressions of the Conference were today summed up by a British authority in this phrase: "Satisfactory progress is being made." Balfour is understood to have crystallized his view of the work in hand in these words: "There are many differences which give rise to discussion, but upon discussion it has been found that there is no disagreement of principle. The only difficulty is in finding formulas which shall embody our agreement on principles."

This being the view of the British delegation, it is easy to imagine what an uproar has been caused by the articles in the Paris edition of The Daily Mail, which suggested that the work of the conference was in most respects sterile, but in some respects decidedly harmful. The solution of the colonial problem, according to one report printed in that paper, threatened the disruption of the British Empire. In addition to the official statement issued through the Press Bureau in London that these reports were inaccurate and mischievous, there have been several unofficial readings of the riot act to representatives of the paper in question.

Lord Northcliffe's men make out a very strong case for their presentation of the news connected with the settlement of the question of the disposal of the German colonies, and several British journalists of independent views are inclined to believe that good rather than harm was done by the ventilation of the Australian attitude. On the other hand, in official quarters the position taken is that partial statements are nearly always misleading.

The Australians, who were incensed at the solution arrived at Thursday, have since been placated by representations which, roughly speaking, have been along these lines: The League of Nations, when it comes into being, will undoubtedly accept the existing situation unless there has been flagrant disregard of the principles which is to be the mission of the league to maintain. In other words, the argument is the application of the doctrine of "beati possidentes." Japanese agreement with that doctrine goes without saying.

ANGRY AT COLONIES' LOSS.

German Paper Calls International Guardianship "Humbug."

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Jan. —"It is 'Robbery of German Colonies,'" says the Rhenish Westphalian Gazette in a headline commenting on the decision taken regarding those colonies.

"Fools who believe in the generosity and decency of the Entente and who have hoped in Wilson's influence can now turn around," says the paper. "What has been accomplished is the pure robbery of our colonies, and a tyranny over a German nation, which could hardly be worse.

"In reality the German colonies go to foreign hands. Everything which is said to excuse his theft is only to cover the brutal truth. Beautiful words and phrases are made in order to throw sand in the eyes of the world and the German Michel.

"What is the meaning of international administration or guardianship of the German colonies? It is all a veil of Humbug!

"It is a nice league which begins its duties thus; and Germany will never be able to protest. This will be among the many humiliating peace conditions. There is also an end of the Berlin-to Bagdad dream."

INDIA READY TO AID IN COLONIAL RULE

By ERNEST MARSHALL.

a seat in the House of Lords, has been widely recognized as a great stroke of political imagination, emphasizing the position of India as an integral part of the British Empire.

As a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES, I was received by the Indian delegates in Lord Sinha's sitting room in the Hotel Majestic, where the British Government is entertaining its Indian and colonial guests. His Highness, who is a splendid figure of a man, was dressed in the khaki uniform of a Major General in the British Army. Lord Sinha was in conventional morning dress.

His Highness has a command of English such as one would expect only from a man educated in an English public school and university. Lord Sinha speaks English as if it were his mother tongue. He was educated in England, where he joined the bar and his work as a barrister and advocate general of Bengal has always been conducted in that language.

When I questioned His Highness regarding the loyalty of India, the Maharajah replied:

"It is only those who do not know India who could doubt her loyalty to the British Empire. Loyalty is the foundation of the aspirations both of the princes and the people. It is the spirit which guides us in our pursuit of these aspirations."

Lord Sinha confirmed this view when asked the meaning of the unrest of which so much has been heard in America. Lord Sinha replied:

"Unrest is a word of very wide signification. There has been unrest in India in the past and will be in the future, as there is unrest in every country which is striving to work out its own salvation.

"There are in India men who frankly hold revolutionary views and who would like to sever the connection between India and the empire. Their number is infinitesimal, but owing to the machinations of German agents they became during the war a danger to society and it was found necessary to deal with them under the Defense of India act, and so to prevent them from spreading revolutionary propaganda among the ignorant.

"With the end of the war the importance of this numerically infinitesimal band is greatly diminished.

"But India has great political aspirations. She is proud of her position within the British Empire, but she aspires to control her own internal affairs as the people of Great Britain, Australia, and Canada control theirs.

"You no doubt have heard of different parties among us, such as the Moderates, Extremists, and Home Rulers. The object of all these parties is the same. The difference between us is merely one of the pace at which we can go to attain our goal.

"The Government seems to many to be too timid, too slow where reform is concerned. The pace at which the Moderates would go is considerably faster, but not fast enough to satisfy the more extreme party, while there are others who would snatch at the goal now and trust to luck for the future.

"At the present time reforms are in contemplation which when carried out will go a long way toward satisfying the immediate aspirations of the Moderate party.

"What I want you to understand is that unrest is not necessarily an evil. Wherever you have a growing political life you are bound to have unrest, and history teaches us that in all such unrest there is an agitation on the extreme left which goes to balance the conservatism on the extreme right that resists all reform."

Both the Maharajah and Lord Sinha spoke of the pride they felt as the representatives of India at the great assembly. India is proud that she fought side by side with the countries of Europe for the cause of truth and justice, and proud of having her share in the responsibilities which lie heavy on the conference.

GERMAN SOVIETS IN FIGHT FOR LIFE

Berlin Councils Vote for a Rival Convention to the One at Weimar.

WILL TRY TO SHARE POWER

Members Loath to Give Up Easy Work, Good Pay, and Free Automobiles.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Feb. 1, (via Copenhagen.)—Next to the various Bolshevist rebellions in Bremen, Hamburg, Stettin and Brunswick and the colonial problem, the German people are most interested in the National Convention which is to convene at Weimar Feb. 6.

The Government's arrangements for the protection of the convention are such that no dangerous Spartacide coup is feared at Weimar, though some of the Soldiers' Councils are even now planning to supersede the convention and once more seize control of the Government.

The latest attempt of that sort is made by the Soldiers' Council of the Tenth Army Corps at Hanover, which invites all Soldiers' Councils, especially those on the eastern frontier, to join in a congress of councils to decide what measures are to be taken to counteract the National Convention and to constitute a central organization which is to be vested with supreme power.

This is in the face of the fact that such a Central Council of Soldiers and Workers is already in existence, comprising legally elected delegates from councils all over Germany, with Mayor Leinert of Hanover as President. This Central Council, as will be remembered, expressed itself decidedly in favor of the National Convention, to which it was willing to yield all power. Since the elections failed to give the Socialists a majority some Soldiers' Councils which are really Spartacide are unwilling to play the game.

Fear of a Third Rebellion.

The Majority Socialists severely censure such attempts at a third rebellion, and some said very plainly at yesterday's meeting of the local Berlin Soldiers and Workers' Councils that the latter were not ripe to seize the Government and could not spare the aid of the bourgeois classes, but in the balloting on whether a meeting of delegates from all over Germany should be called to reconsider the army reform order as decreed by the People's Commissioners recently, the Majority Socialists were defeated by 492 to 362 votes.

As, however, the Central Council only has the right to call such a meeting, it is unlikely that the Government's army reform will be rescinded. It is also hoped that the Central Council will at once proceed against the Hanover Soldiers' Council's announced intentions.

The present Government is having everything prepared for the national convention to create more stable conditions. The People's Commissioners will resign on the day the convention meets, and it will elect a new Provisional Government with a President and regular Cabinet Ministers.

There seems to be a tacit agreement to concede the presidency to a Democrat congenial to the Majority Socialists, while the Prime Minister will be a Socialist. The latter office will be vested with much greater power than the former.

Unless all signs fail, Herr von Payer, former Vice Chancellor, will be elected President as a concession to the Southern States. Dr. Dernburg, whose name has been mentioned, also has more antagonists than friends.

Either Ebert or Scheidemann may be elected Prime Minister, but it is not impossible that Noske may, against his own wish, receive sufficient votes from all parties to assure his election for the most important office, because most of the delegates, except the Socialists, may prefer his energy to Ebert's and Scheidemann's dilatory methods.

Expect Outbreak on Thursday.

The Berliner Tageblatt has the following:

"We hear from a reliable source that the radical elements are again preparing a disturbance in the capital which is to begin Feb. 6 with demonstrations and a meeting of the Spartacus League against the National Convention.

"The Government also has information regarding an armed expedition by Gotha Spartacides against Weimar. Counter-measures have been taken.

"It is feared that not only the Spartacides and Communists but also the Soldiers' Councils are involved in this movement. While these councils do not favor Bolshevist principles, yet they demand from the Government guarantees for a continuation of the Soldiers' and Workers' Councils. We are reliably informed that it is planned to convene a congress of Soldiers' and Workers' Councils in Berlin simultaneously with the convention at Weimar."

Move to Divide Authority.

BERLIN, Feb. 1, (Associated Press.)—At the meeting of the Workmen's Councils of Greater Berlin which adopted a resolution in favor of the Central Council convening a national congress of Soldiers' and Workers' Councils radical speakers insisted on the retention of Soviet rule as a check on attempts at restoration of the dynasty and demanded that their power be enlarged. The meeting also demanded by a large majority the immediate liberation of George Ledebour, the Social Democratic leader, who has been under arrest since "Bolshevist week" on the charge of inciting to insurrection.

Among those who have followed the activities of the councils since the recent revolt, and in the last week, there is scarcely any doubt that the Congress will afford the Spartacides, Independent Socialists, and other radicals an opportunity to insist on the retention of the Soviet system, alone, if possible, but, in any event, as a Government department having equal rights with any eventual Parliament or other governmental body.

Slim as the chances for a purely Soviet form of government still appear to be, observers view it as in no wise impossible that the councils may be able to compel the retention of the Soviets in some form, because even many of the Majority Socialists, who reject the methods of the Russian Government, are inclined to compromise by permitting the councils to have some rôle in the future Government. No less a personage than Chairman Leinert of the Central Executive Committee declared last week that it might be advisable to retain the councils in some form.

The decision to hold the Congress is obviously a vote of lack of confidence in the Central Committee. The latter permits it to be unofficially announced that it is "indisposed to grant this wish."

The resolution demanding the summoning of the Congress was adopted after speakers had attacked the Government hotly in connection with War Minister Reinhardt's recent order regarding the relations between the councils and officers. It was declared in the resolution that this order "is calculated to reduce the councils to a position of impotence and insignificance," an opinion which the Berlin councils had strikingly illustrated this week when they sent a demand to the Cabinet to appear before them and defend its recent course, and particularly its attitude during "Bolshevist week."

The Government, in a written reply, declined to appear before a local council, which was quite unauthorized to exercise control over the National Government.

Cling to Newly Found Power.

Fertile soil for the seed which the German Bolsheviki are busily sowing exists in the unwillingness of great numbers of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Councils to be legislated out of their profitable sinecures. The National Assembly of these councils is composed largely of the ruder elements in their callings, men who before the war were accustomed to work for a living, but now find themselves in a position of real authority, with almost no work and good pay, and Government automobiles at their disposal.

The Bolshevist advocates of the Soviet Government have from the beginning been playing on these men's natural reluctance to surrender their authority and perquisites, and the developments of the last few days indicate that the campaign has achieved extensive results.

The recent order of the War Minister gave the agitators a welcome issue. This order, as already reported by The Associated Press, authorized the Soldiers' Councils to control disciplinary punishments and to elect and remove officers, but did not confer on them the right to exercise the power of military command, or to control the leaders' military orders or dispositions.

The Society for the Suppression of Bolshevism, recently organized in Berlin, offers a reward of 10,000 marks for the capture of Karl Radek, the head of the Russian propaganda in Germany, or for information disclosing his whereabouts in Germany.

Radek is still believed to be hiding here and to be identified indirectly with the Spartacide insurrections in Wilhelmshaven, Bremen, and Düsseldorf.

Eichhorn, the fugitive former police chief of Berlin, it is urged, should also be apprehended. He is apparently under safe cover awaiting the convening of the National Assembly, to which he was elected as the head of the Independent Socialist ticket in Berlin. Eichhorn is said to be depending upon immunity as a member of the Assembly to prevent his arrest when that body meets.

VOLUNTEERS FOR POSEN.

Germans Redoubling Their Efforts to Raise Formidable Army.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.
Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Feb. 2.—Reports reaching the headquarters of the American Army of Occupation, show that the Berlin Government is redoubling its efforts to raise a formidable army for the Posen front.

New appeals for volunteers have been sent out. The recruiting is done by the various army corps staffs throughout Germany. Each recruit must have had six months of active service. He enlists for a month and can withdraw on two weeks' notice, or he can be discharged by his commanding officer on two weeks' notice.

The new instructions direct that the troops be sent east as rapidly as possible, the designated districts being East Prussia, Pomerania, Posen, Upper Silesia, and West Prussia. There are indications that no large forces are intended for use against the Bolsheviki in East Prussia, but large forces are destined for the Posen front. If plans of those in charge of the recruiting pan out the Germans will have an army corps of considerable size against the Poles within a very short time; in fact, they would be able shortly to do about as they wished with the Polish forces. However, the volunteering, official notices show, is not brisk in many districts. Germany has ample officers from the old army to command the prospective volunteer forces.

afternoon in Vienna, 5,000 unemployed assembling and Communist leaders vehemently assailing the Government, demanding ample support and urging the people not to pay rent tomorrow. The crowds then proceeded towards the Parliament house, committing acts of violence and plundering, until subdued by the police.

Other disturbances are reported from Hungarian points, especially Mako, where eight persons were killed and many wounded.

BERLIN, Jan. 31, (via Copenhagen.)—An American Commission, consisting of twenty-one officers and six enlisted men, arrived from Cologne at noon today and is staying at the Esplanade Hotel.

Captain Gherardi, President of the Commission, went out early and in his absence none of the other members felt authorized to make any statement concerning the nature of its business. It will remain for a considerable time and has already opened offices at the hotel.

From another source I hear that the Commission is to investigate Germany's political and social conditions and report to President Wilson personally.

BAR ON EXPORT OF CAPITAL.

Germany Takes Extreme Measures to Prevent Flight of Wealth.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 31.—Extreme measures are being taken in Germany to prevent the further export of capital. German capital in shares exported between July 1 and Nov. 22 must be reported in detail to the Government. The banks will be obliged to submit to an investigation of their books in order to uncover these transactions. Incorrect statements will be punishable by a fine of as much as $12,000, and the capital may even be claimed by the State.

Even the export of goods and works of art must be reported, together with the reason for sending them out of the country. Henceforth the contents of registered letters must be declared.

According to the Volkszeitung, measures are being taken to prevent the hoarding of paper money, which is done to avoid full payment of taxes. By a certain day and within a period of two weeks all paper money in the country must be exchanged for new money at an open counter in the district where the owner of the money resides. Complete lists of the owners, who are obliged to affix their signatures will be forwarded to the tax authorities so that the exchange cannot be made under assumed names.

In order to avoid unnecessary trouble people are advised to deposit all their money immediately in savings or other banks. Thus the State will be able to lay hands on all the money in the country.

The Deutsche Bank has raised all employes' salaries 25 per cent., and all employes who have been serving in the army have received the promotion which they would otherwise have had during the war.

GERMANY'S POLICY WORRIES FRANCE

It Aims at Annexation of German Austria and Prevention of a Strong Poland.

IMMEDIATE DANGER SEEN

French Statesmen Would Like Action Taken by Conference to Postpone Austrian Plebescite.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.
Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—In her efforts to acquire the habits of the new diplomacy and to gracefully subscribe to ideals about the practicability of which she is so skeptical, France is not forgetting for a moment her old traditions, fears, and dangers. She is talking publicly at those rare open meetings of the Peace Conference scheduled once a week, if convenient, in the language of international altruism and Wilsonian ethics, but all the time she is thinking of what the old enemy across the Rhine is going to do next.

At this moment it is the threat of the "self-determination" plebiscite of German Austria controlled by German agents. Frankly, France is worried by the increasing signs she sees of the developing foreign policy of Germany, and her specific concern at this moment in that direction is the possibility this very month of February of just such a plebiscite to determine whether German Austria shall be annexed to Germany.

The population of this part of the former dual monarchy is practically all German, so from that viewpoint alone, leaving out other considerations, it would go to Germany under the Wilson nationality principle. To bring that about is one of two cardinal points of the new German foreign policy so far sufficiently defined as to be recognized as such a policy. The other point is to do everything possible to give the new Polish State a bad start and keep it weak and powerless in the future. By stating these two things Germany is desiring and working for you have got the two things France is most concerned to prevent.

France, if possible, would gladly swap all her future hopes of a League of Nations if she could do now everything she would like to Germany. She would care very little about what happened to the islands in the Pacific Ocean if she could be sure of a strong Poland, get the left bank of the Rhine and remove forever the possibility of German Austria being annexed to Germany.

Such annexation is looked upon by France as an immediate danger. A plebiscite is probable soon, and German agents in Austria have been most active preparing for it. It is something the Peace Conference has not given any time to yet. France would take now quick preventive action.

If it is impossible to prevent the voting of the Austrian Germans on the question of self-determination France would at least have the Peace Conference issue a formal warning that the result of such a plebiscite would not be considered in any way as evidence when the time comes to settle the future allegiance or independence of German Austria.

She would make such warning as strong and definite as was that to the small nations a week ago, telling them that continuation of attempts to get territory by force in anticipation of the decisions of the Peace Conference would prejudice their causes before the Judges of the Quai d'Orsay. For between the attempts of the German agents to force and control the voting in the plebiscite of German Austria and the attempt of the Czechoslavs, for example, to get territory away from the Poles by force, France recognizes no difference in principle.

So instead of allowing matters to take their course in German Austria without interference by the Allies, France would check them altogether, or at least set up a countermovement to develop the desire of the people of German Austria for a State of their own entirely independent of Germany.

One way suggested would be to postpone the whole matter till after the war damage and reparation bill Germany must pay is determined, for the hope and expectation of France is that this bill will be so great that neither German Austria nor any other country will care to become a part of the nation that has got to pay it.

GREIFSWALD DOCTORS STRIKE.

Protest Red Flag Over Dispensaries—Railway Strike Forbidden.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 31, (via Copenhagen.)—Moved by the arbitrary action of the Soldiers' Council and a certain laboring class, the physicians of the University of Greifswald have followed the example of those of Wilhelmshaven and Bremen and declared a strike as a protest against the hoisting of red flags on the Greifswald dispensaries by the council.

The physicians previously informed the council of their intention, but were ignored. Now they, as well as all the hospital dispensaries' attendants, refuse to give any medical aid to patients at those institutions and turn away new patients.

The Central Council, which is ruled entirely by the Majority Socialists, warns the railway employes not to strike for the present, even if their demands are justified, because it would cause the utter collapse of the whole of Germany.

PLANS A LEGISLATURE FOR LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Canadian Minister of Justice Suggests an International House of Representatives.

PARIS, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—An International Peoples' House of Representatives, to be established in connection with the League of Nations, is a striking proposal contained in a memorandum submitted to the Peace Conference by Charles J. Doherty, Canadian Minister of Justice, through the British League of Nations Commission, of which he is a member.

Every nation in the world would be represented on this body, and the delegates would be representatives of the peoples themselves. This plan is to be presented to the various delegations in the Peace Conference.

Mr. Doherty's view is that it would be a vital mistake to declare at this time the principle that the interests of humanity are to be confined only to sovereign States. He believes that the present time is opportune to interest the peoples of the world directly in methods for the prevention of war and that the opportunity ought to be seized.

The plans thus far suggested provide for the constitution of judicial tribunals and for the exercise of executive powers by the Governments, especially of the great Powers. Mr. Doherty asserts that there would be greater assurance of a general determination of the peoples of all countries to maintain peaceful relations if a body, mainly legislative in function and composed of representatives directly elected by the nations, great and small, were added to supplement the work of these judicial and executive bodies.

In such an assembly the principle powers would be those of inquiry and legislation, taking the form of recommendations to sovereign States. The necessity so far insisted upon of equal representation would disappear, the members assigned to each country conforming rather to such considerations as influence the distribution of seats in any legislative assembly.

"A SINGLE FINANCIAL FRONT."

Italian Peace Delegate Says His Proposal Is Well Received.

PARIS, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—Signor Crespi, member of the Italian peace delegation for financial and economic questions, speaking to The Associated Press today on the financial situation, said:

"I have already submitted to the allied Ministers a proposal for the establishment of a single financial front for the Allies. The proposal has been well received, and several of the allied Ministers have brought forward concrete plans on the subject.

"My great point is, the Central Empires as a whole must be made to compensate us for the damage we have suffered in this war. We have not fought against one State only, but against a conglomeration of States. It follows from this that the responsibility is collective, and that all the enemy States will have to pay in proportion to their wealth."

RHINELAND'S AIMS.

Wants to Remain a Part of a United German Nation.

COBLENZ, Feb. 2.—Having the approval of the elected delegates to the German National Assembly, which meets this week at Weimar, the following declaration by a majority of the Rhineland parties is being widely circulated:

"We, the undersigned representatives of the Rheinish population in occupied Prussian territory, hereby protest in a most emphatic and earnest manner against the campaign being conducted in the foreign press for the separation of the left bank of the Rhine or parts thereof from the rest of Germany. Relying upon the universally acknowledged popular right of self-determination, we demand that we be permitted to remain in the united German nation.

"Inasmuch as there is a strong prospect that Prussia is to be divided up we authorize the committee selected by us for that purpose to draft a plan for the erection of a West German Republic which is to form part of the German nation, said draft to be based upon the national constitution to be drawn by the German National Assembly." This declaration was adopted at a mass meeting at Cologne on Feb. 1.

George H. Packwood, brother of Azeele Packwood, who committed suicide on the Palisades, arrived in this city yesterday from his home in St. Louis and took charge of the body at Greenleaf's undertaking establishment at Englewood, N. J. The funeral will be held to-day at the Trinity Cemetery at 155th Street and Amsterdam Avenue.

Mr. Packwood refused to discuss any of the questions raised by the death of the young woman and said that a statement might be issued later.

PUPILS BAR LIEBKNECHT SON.

Strike at Berlin High School by Members of His Class.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Feb. 1, (via Copenhagen.)—All the pupils of the highest class of the Berlin gymnasium declared a strike when young Paul Liebknecht, son of the Sparatacide leader who was killed recently, presented himself at the school after the teachers' council had decided to readmit him, despite the fact that he had been in the Vorwärts building when it was held by the Spartacides.

The principal pleaded with the pupils to have compassion on the misled youth, but they persisted that they would not share their lessons with anybody who had shot at their brothers and fathers with a machine gun. They offered to get their parents' consent to the strike and left the school.

Yesterday young Liebknecht wrote that he would remain away for the present.

CZECHS MUST FREE POLES.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—The provisional agreemen approved by the Supreme Council regarding the district of Teschen needs only the signatures of the Polish and Czechoslovak delegates to make it valid. It imposes on the Czechoslovaks the obligation not to go beyond a certain zone and to return Polish prisoners. The Czechoslovaks must not carry out any military construction and must supply coal to Poland according to conditions determined upon. On Monday the Supreme Council will appoint a commission of five members to supervise the carrying out of the agreement.

The Supreme Council also will appoint tomorrow, it is reported, a commission of two experts from each of the great Powers to examine into the Rumanian question. Premier Bratiano of Rumania, who yesterday demanded that a great portion of the Banat be given to Rumania, said today that the Banat and Transylvania should be occupied by allied troops in order to prevent the spread of Bolshevism.

PICHON NOT HOPEFUL OF RUSSIAN MEETING

French Foreign Minister Says the Only Official Reply Has Come from Crimea.

OMSK SHOWS RELUCTANCE

Position of Allied Army in North Not Dangerous—France's Relations with Finland to be Resumed.

PARIS, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—Following up the practice he initiated last Sunday of meeting personally the foreign newspaper correspondents, M. Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, today frankly discussed some subjects which are absorbing the attention of the conference itself and the public. He was obliged to state with regard to several of these matters that he was unable to give the desired information because the Supreme Council had not yet been able to function upon them, or was without data.

With reference to the suspended effort to bring together the representatives of the various Russian political sections and the Peace Commissioners at a meeting at Princes Islands, he said that so far there had been only one official reply to the invitation which the Council had sent out by wireless, and that had come in the shape of a document sent by a Russian gentleman who had been a member of the Duma and is now head of the Government of Crimea.

This gentleman expressed a willingness to go to the Princes Islands, but feared that he would be alone so far as the other Russian factions were concerned. The Russian groups in Paris had written a letter to Premier Clemenceau saying they would not go to Princes Islands, but their own Governments had not responded to the invitation formally.

M. Pichon said he had noticed the reply of the Bolshevist Government as published in the newspapers, but that it had never been received officially. M. Longuet, proprietor of a Paris newspaper, who received the communication, had not been permitted to use the French wireless to make replies to the Bolshevist Government, because, M. Pichon said, he had been informed in a note that there was no authorization for the use of the wireless for other than official communications.

As to the Omsk Government, Admiral Kolchak, its head, had not said that he would refuse to attend the Princes Island Conference, but it appeared that he was rather inclined not to do so.

Touching the situation in Eastern Siberia, M. Pichon, in answer to an inquiry, said that undoubtedly the Entente military forces there were subject to the control of the Supreme War Council in Paris. The French General Janin, of the Czechoslovak forces, was commander-in-chief so far as the actual disposition and movement of the troops were concerned, but General Knox, of the British army, was charged with the control and transportation of all supplies.

In explanation of France's attitude toward Finland, M. Pinchon said that while the Government there had been recognized at first by France, such action had been reconsidered because of the developments in the movement in Finland to instal a monarchical form of government. However, that movement had been stopped, and France intended to resume relations with Finland.

Turning to Poland, he pointed out that the frontiers of that country had not yet been fixed. All declarations of the Entente had been to the effect that Poland should have access to the sea at one or two more ports, but he could not tell whether Danzig would be one of the ports. The effects of the creation of such a condition upon Eastern Prussia had not yet been considered. He was less concerned with the fate of East Prussia than the fate of Poland.

In reply to the suggestion that the American troops might be withdrawn from Northern Russia, in the Archangel sector, if the Princes Islands conference were not held, M. Pichon said that the conference had not yet considered what steps would be taken in event of failure, and that there had been no consultations even on the subject since the invitations had been dispatched.

As for French activities in Southern Russia, he declared that those troops were simply protecting the ports. The news from the Archangel section was not sufficiently definite as yet to justify any conclusion. Undoubtedly, he added, the Bolsheviki had stronger forces there now than they had before, so it had been considered safer to bring the allied troops closer together. That was all that could be said now, except that he did not regard the situation dangerous, and it might be said that if the Bolsheviki were stronger in the north they had become weaker elsewhere.

As to the campaign of the Esthonians, all those new Governments were in the same position. They had some troops, but lacked the equipment and munitions with which, they asserted, they could secure results and make a successful campaign. It was difficult, commented the Minister, to learn whether that was true.

In Ukraine the people also lacked arms, munitions, and other supplies. They were just able to repel invasion at the present time. If the Ukraine peasants were once persuaded that their lands could not be taken from them again they would be strongly anti-Bolshevist.

Asked if France had decided to hand over the region in the Balkans occupied by her troops to Greece, the Minister replied:

"That question has not yet come before the council. The Greek problems might be taken up at tomorrow's meeting perhaps."

A great many of the troops had been withdrawn from the disputed territory pending the decision of the council or the conference.

M. Pichon was decidely of the opinion ion that the armistice authorized the Entente Governments to stop the hostilities between Poland and Germany. The fact that the Lithuanians had set up a claim at the same time as the poles for possession of East Prussia simply illustrated the complexity of the problem with which the council had to deal.

Referring to the declarations of the official communiqués of last week on the subject of international control of the colonies, M. Pichon said that action in that matter did not in any way touch the Italian claims to control of Dalmatia. That subject had not been considered, nor had the council undertaken to settle the selection of the mandatories to be placed over the colonies.

Also it was true, M. Pichon said, that no decision had been reached as regards the validity or the vitality of the so-called war treaties under which dispositions were to be made of much territory.

In conclusion M. Pichon said that at present it was too early to appreciate what was being done by the conference. It would take time to realize its importance. Various committees had been created and were getting to work, the results of which would soon be apparent, but at present because what had been done had to be considered in the light of what had taken place.

Between the heads of the great powers and what was still to be done, a proper understanding could not be had at this time.

Sobersides?

A look behind the scenes of a banking institution

STEP into one and look around! Your first comment would be, "What a solemn place! Why do those people behind the desks look so serious-minded?"

In bowing humbly to that "blanket indictment" may we rise to explain—

That serious manner which you see, reflects a thing you don't see—the responsibility of caring for and handling other people's money. Not the most frivolous business in the world, we can assure you!

That responsibility runs all through the Trust Company, from the usher in the hall who directs you where to go, to the directors in the Board Room who decide what and what-not to do.

Board Room decisions, you will agree, call for breadth of thought and sound judgment. Which in turn, call for men of wide experience and varied responsibilities of their own.

To illustrate these responsibilities:

The Columbia Trust Company's Board meetings bring together:

9 heads of banking firms
2 bank presidents
3 presidents of manufacturing corporations
3 presidents of public service corporations
1 dry-goods merchant
3 lawyers
1 railroad president
1 real estate expert
1 business executive
1 engineer
4 trust company officials

Despite the constant responsibility which every officer and employe must feel, we thoroughly enjoy this business. You will find us welcoming personal contact with our customers. We hope you will always find a warm friendliness behind the "serious manner."

GLASGOW GUARDED BY 10,000 SOLDIERS

Troops Keep Order in City, but Strikers Bitterly Resent Their Presence.

BELFAST CHURCHES DARK

Dublin Workers to Demand 44-Hour Week and 150 Per Cent. Advance in Wages.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—There were no alarming developments in the labor troubles today, either on the Clyde or in Belfast. Quiet prevailed in both districts. In Belfast many of the churches were obliged to abandon the evening services owing to lack of light. It is hoped that a number of the shipyard workers may be induced to resume work during the course of the week.

More troops have arrived in Glasgow, where it is now said there are 10,000. Soldiers are still posted on the roofs of the buildings surrounding George Square in Glasgow. The military display is provoking great resentment among the strikers there.

The Strike Bulletin, the offices of which were raided yesterday by the police, today issued a bitter attack on the Government, which it accuses of acting illegally in employing troops and seeking a pretext to employ arms against the Clyde workers.

"The workers are not so foolish as to fall into such a trap," the newspaper says. "The workers have advanced a practical scheme to avert unemployment, and instead of discussing it the Government has made an attempt to crush its advocates by Czarist methods. The Government is clearly in league with the employers to curb discussion of the scheme which has been before them for years."

Three more arrests were made today on charges of inciting to riot.

The Clyde side workers, who are opposed to the present strike, held a big meeting in the Govan district of Glasgow today. Councilor Wardley, a labor leader, presided. There were a number of interruptions and interjections during the meeting, but finally the following resolution was adopted:

"We trades unionists and citizens of Govan condemn wholeheartedly the undemocratic and unconstitutional methods which force us to take part in the strike. We pledge ourselves to support the representatives of the trades unions in this country and to use our influence to maintain law and order."

A movement also has been started in Glasgow to form a Patriotic Workers' League on the Clyde side, the object being to take control of the trades unions out of the hands of the extremists and to appoint shop stewards to work in harmony with the official union leaders. A big demonstration is to be held on Tuesday to discuss the matter.

The Bishop of London, speaking at a Canadian meeting today, said that the present strikes were a reaction of war and the result of a natural desire of the people for a fuller and better life. It might seem strange to some, he added, that men who had suffered the horrors and hard work of the trenches should want to go on strike as soon as they returned to civil life. The reason was simple, he declared; they missed the brotherhood of the trenches, where all had combined to defeat the common foe, and found themselves once more face to face with evil social conditions which they thought their sacrifices had removed.

BELFAST, Feb. 2.—Two thousand house builders today joined the strike for a forty-four hour week.

Joseph Devlin, Member of Parliament for West Belfast, addressing his constituents and referring to the refusal of the Government to intervene in the situation, said he had never heard of a more callous or indefensible attitude. He said he thoroughly sympathized with the strikers.

STRIKES STIR WHOLE NATION.

Leaders of Capital and Labor Anxious To Find Remedies.

LONDON, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—The industrial unrest has superseded the Peace Conference as the chief topic of interest in Great Britain. Many of the leaders in the camps of capital and labor are making suggestions for a general remedy. The proposal of John R. Clynes, the former Food Controller, for an industrial congress representing all interests, seems to be the most popular today. It has a rival in a new society called the "National Alliance of Employers and Employed," which representative men on both sides are promoting.

One point on which every one is agreed is that some general principles, particularly applying to wages and hours, must be recognized. Local settlements of disputes in the various trades and factories only create unrest and confusion. Whenever one section of workers obtains any particular concession, the others who have not equal advantages become dissatisfied. When the Ministry of Munitions gave the engineers an increase of 12½ per cent. in their pay last year, the demand for the same increase spread through many unions until it reached even the postmen and street cleaners, and finally cost the country many millions.

Sir Eric Geddes has made a novel proposal—that some trade union take over a large national factory and run it as an experiment to show what can be done by such co-operative management.

Naturally, politics is becoming involved in the agitation. Some workers and freetraders assert that the Government is keeping back stocks of food, which might be released now, in order to keep up prices in the interest of the dealers, and also that the Board of Trade has an understanding with the manufacturers to maintain an embargo against imports, in the interest of English goods. The protectionists justify such a policy by the argument that it guarantees employment for British workers, while the freetraders argue that the whole community would benefit more by cheaper prices.

The newspapers are divided into two parties, one contending that the unrest is due chiefly to the desire of the workers for better conditions of living and more leisure, and the other that the strikes are engineered by Socialists and Syndicalists, who want to revolutionize conditions of industry and capture control for the working classes.

The Morning Post asserts that the chief instigators in the Glasgow and Belfast strikes are Emmanuel Shinwell and Simon Greenspon, both Russians, whom it calls the "Trotzkys of Glasgow and Belfast." Some of the papers commend the Government's policy in keeping hands off.

The Observer attacks the Government policy of "wait and see," and urges that the new Labor Minister, Sir Robert Horne, who is a lawyer, be replaced by a labor leader, who should organize a Council of Employers and Trade Unionists.

While the debate rages, the strike movement threatens to spread beyond the ranks of the manual workers. The Association of Railway Clerks is discussing action because the Government won't recognize the station masters and agents as a body. The postal employes are arranging a meeting to put forward a scheme for a seven-hour day with a half holiday Saturday.

BRITISH RAILWAY DISPUTE.

Clerks Demand Recognition of Their Association and May Strike.

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 2.—A meeting of 500 delegates of the Railway Clerks' Association, which is having a controversy with the railways over the question of its recognition, today adopted a resolution, with only twelve dissentients, calling upon the various branches and members to take such action as the executive deems advisable in the event that a satisfactory settlement is not reached by Tuesday. This in all probability means a strike.

Secretary Walkden aserted that Sir Albert Stanley, President of the Board of Trade, had advised the railway executives that recognition of the Clerks' association would be subversive of discipline, which was a serious reflection on a body of educated men.

DUBLIN CLANS TO GATHER.

Labor Congress to Demand Shorter Week and Big Advance.

DUBLIN, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—A labor congress has been summoned for next week to meet in the Mansion House here to demand a universal forty-four hour week at wages 150 per cent. above the pre-war rates with a minimum of fifty shillings (approximately $12.50) weekly for all workers. The Dublin Trades Council has announced, however, that it will move an amendment to this proposal advocating a forty-hour week.

AIMS OF BRITISH STRIKERS.

Shorter Hours Intended to Reduce Idleness, J. L. Jones Explains.

Despite the sporadic and unorganized nature of the strikes in Glasgow and other English industrial centres, they are being directed with a concerted purpose, according to John L. Jones, a member of the Smelters' Union of Manchester, and a delegate of the British Labor Party. In a lecture delivered at the Rand School, 7 East Fifteenth Street yesterday afternoon, Mr. Jones said the unrest was grounded in the determination of the people to eliminate the condition which tolerated the presence of abundance of stores of many kinds and yet found the workers too poor to buy them.

"While a very generous pension has been provided by the Government to take care of the unemployed," continued the speaker, "the workers fully realize that the unemployed are always a menace, and they are fully determined upon such a reduction of hours as will absorb them. They are in a position strong enough to compel the capitalist class to accede to their demands. They are opposed absolutely to the British imperialist policy of taking care of the surplus product by seeking foreign markets. That surplus must first be used for the well-being of every man, woman, and child in the world.

"The demands of the British Labor Party are summed up in five propositions. First, immediate withdrawal of troops from Russia. Second, free trade throughout the world. Third, nationalization of railways, mines, power sources, and armament manufactories. Fourth, the imposition of all taxes upon capital, and last, absolute abolition of all conscription."

FRANCIS APPROVES THE RUSSIAN PARLEY

Ambassador Indorses Plan for Official Investigation of Conditions.

ENVOYS TO BE AS WITNESSES

Denial of Any Recognition of Soviet Government or Any Recommendation for It.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—David R. Francis, American Ambassador to Russia, left for Paris today after undergoing an operation here. Before leaving he gave the Sunday Times an interview in which, speaking of the proposal of a conference of the Allies with representatives of the various Russian factions at Princes Islands, he said:

"I approve of the plan of official investigation at Princes Islands into Russian conditions. Sazonoff, Milukoff, and Maklakoff—the latter was Russian Ambassador to Paris during the Provisional Government's régime—believe that it would compromise them to participate in a conference with the Bolsheviki. I look upon it more as a court of inquiry to ascertain officially the exact nature of conditions which prevail in Russia.

"This court of inquiry, or commission, would formulate rules for its own procedure. Sazonoff, Milukoff, Maklakoff, or other patriotic Russians would occupy much he same position as ordinary witnesses against persons charged with criminal acts. Princes' Islands would supply a nisi prius court with the Peace Congress as the supreme court. It is very different from the invitation of Bolsheviki to the Paris Conference suggested by Lloyd George."

The Ambassador said that never on any occasion had he recognized the Soviet Government nor had he ever recommended the United States Government to recognize it.

"Twice," he went on "the German Government through von Kühlmann demanded of Lenine and Trotzky my immediate expulsion from Russia, first when I issued an address to the Russian people endeavoring to arouse them over the Brest-Litovsk treaty, and second, when I issued an address on the Fourth of July which reflected on the Soviet Government.

"Von Kühlmann's applications for my banishment were unavailing. The Soviet Government took no action, as it always hoped my Government would recognize it. I never called upon Trotzky, and the only time I came into contact with Lenine was when I, together with all the allied and neutral diplomatists, demanded the release of the Rumanian Minister, who had been imprisoned in the Fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul.

"Lenine undoubtedly supplied the brains of the Soviet movement. He is an intellectual man whose intellect is swamped by fanaticism. His object in life is to bring about a worldwide revolution. He has used German money freely in order to secure dictatorship of the masses. The basic principle of the Soviet movement is to prevent the exploitation of one man by another. It is obviously an insane conception and does away with all accepted ideas of employment. The Soviet will not for an instant permit employers to have a vote.

"The Bolsheviki are a political party and the Soviet is the form of government, or misgovement, which they support. They instituted the reign or terror which now prevails in Russia. They are an army variously estimated at from 250,000 to 600,000 well-disciplined men. The reason for such a wide range in figures lies in actual variations which occur from week to week. Large numbers of men may be scattered or dispersed as the result of a single conflict."

DEFINES BOLIVIA'S CLAIMS.

Foreign Office Reiterates Demands for Provinces of Tacna and Arica.

LA PAZ, Feb. 2.—The Foreign Office has issued a circular declaring that the Bolivian Minister in Paris has correctly interpreted the Government's opinion regarding the peace settlements, and approves his recent statements.

General Montes, the Bolivian Minister to France, in a statement to The Associated Press in Paris on Jan. 29, indicated that Bolivia intended to set up a claim for the provinces of Tacna and Arica, which, he said, were based "on the vital right of access to the ocean through the natural channel of these province" under the doctrine enunciated by President Wilson that nations were entitled to an outlet to the sea.

RED CROSS SLEDS SCOUR NORTH RUSSIA

Bear Food and Medical Relief Through Forests to Sufferers in Remote Hamlets.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

SORROKU, North Russia, Jan. 22, (by Courier to Murmansk and Cable via Paris, Feb. 2.)—The American Red Cross Mission for North Russia, under Major C. T. Williams, Deputy Commissioner, this morning took up again the long, dreary sled trip through the forest trails on their journey of investigation and relief.

They arrived only yesterday from Archangel after a 320-mile sled trip, in which they did countless deeds of mercy that led not only to the saving of hundreds of lives and made happy thousands, but helped to make the name of America even more beloved.

Ten sleds of supplies of priceless drugs make up the Red Cross caravan. In every village they leave medicines and food for the half starving families, and in many cases money. These pitiful peasants' hamlets far away from the railroad never have seen a doctor and have been without drugs or medical help of any kind.

Impromptu clinics are held in these villages by the American Army physician of the Red Cross Mission, Major Kirkpatrick, and much relief has been given. Everywhere great numbers of sick were found who could be saved by simple operations and proper care. Arrangements were made and funds furnished in scores of cases to have patients sent overland by sled to the Red Cross Hospital at Archangel. There they can be cared for and when cured sent back to their villages. American Red Cross' dollars are doing wonderful things here in frozen North Russia.

Major William's report of food conditions and general health of the peasants will determine largely the future policy of the Red Cross in Russia.

COSSACKS IN SIBERIA REBEL.

Refuse to Serve Under Kalmikoff and Ask American Protection.

VLADIVOSTOK, Jan. 30, (Associated Press.)—The Cossacks, under General Kalmikoff, commander on the Ussuri river front, have mutinied and shot an officer.

The Cossacks surrendered their arms and horses to the American troops, whose protection they requested. The men declared that they would no longer serve under General Kalmikoff.

HOW BERLIN MISJUDGED US.

Jules Cambon Sums Up Germany's Errors Concerning America.

PARIS, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—Jules Cambon, French Ambassador in Berlin up to the outbreak of the war and now a member of the French delegation to the Peace Conference, has written an article which appears in The Revue Des Deux Mondes today, entitled "German Errors Concerning the United States," which will be published later as the introduction to a history of the United States written by Professor Farrand, of Yale University. M. Cambon's article says:

"Germany has made not a few fundamental errors concerning the United States. The first was to believe that no true national sentiment existed in the country and to feel that a democracy composed of elements coming from all quarters of the globe, without traditions, would be unable to constitute a homogeneous whole. German illusion was also based on the manifestation of love that some Americans of Germanic stock display for the country of their origin. In order to maintain allegiance to the mother country the Delbrück law had allowed Germans to acquire a double nationality and to be naturalized American citizens without severing their bonds to the Fatherland. Finally, the brother of the Emperor himself, Prince Henry of Prussia, crossed the Atlantic to mingle with the German societies established in America.

"Doubtless there were a certain number of Americans of German origin who remained faithful to the Fatherland, but their number was small as compared with the bulk of the population, and besides, public feeling would not have tolerated among American citizens any acknowledgment of past loyalty which would have been considered an act of treachery.

"Germany had made the same mistake concerning the principles of the American foreign policy, which for many years rested on Washington's Farewell Address, in which he advised his countrymen to stay carefully out of alliances with European powers. But what Washington wanted was to gain time for his country to reach the point where it would be the master of its future."

Another error pointed out by M. Cambon on the part of the Germans was in having overlooked "the deep idealism of the young American soul." The Germans, he says, "were struck only by the economic development of the country and did not believe in the sincerity of the generous feelings among those republicans whose traditions, however, were religious traditions."

M. Cambon refers to the fact that although religion is not a State affair in America, most ceremonies are opened and closed with prayers. This practice he attributes to the higher inspiration such as Seward referred to when he said during the Civil War: "There is a higher law than the Constitution itself."

"It is that higher law that Germany did not credit to America," M. Cambon concludes. "Doubtless Germany herself did not know it."

RED ARTILLERY SHELLS PETROGRAD

tems prevailing in America and Australia, where parceling out land to farmers had led to national prosperity.

Under this plan seizure of land by peasants in the Archangel district would not be legalized. On the other hand, M. Petroff said, the Government would not follow the path of reaction.

If the Trans-Siberian Railway, the great artery supplying Russia with the necessities of life, is to be saved, the Inter-Allied Railroad Commission, headed by John F. Stevens, must act quickly and on a big scale, in the opinion of M. Oustrougoff, Minister of Communications.

In discussing the best means of reorganizing the Siberian railroads, M. Oustrougoff, who is handling a big job with the odds against him, said he welcomed allied control as the salvation of the enterprise, which he declared he was carrying on solely in the interest of all the people of Russia.

"That's the great thing," he said. "The American people should understand we are doing this for all the people, not for any one privileged class."

Urgent necessities, he asserted, were first, railroad material, tools and machines, and second, expert instructors to teach the latest system of railroading in all its branches. He explained that the shortage of locomotives and cars was due largely to the needs of the armies now in the Urals, while insufficient and inferior equipment not only hindered repairs, but gave the workmen an excuse to labor indifferently or not at all.

The fact that the majority of the workshops are located in Bolshevist territory is the great weakness. The labor question is serious, but not hopeless, according to M. Oustrougoff, who said he was convinced that the majority of the workmen were not Bolshevist, although Bolshevist agitators were active and converted many to the fold.

"I am a railroad engineer, unconcerned in politics, but observing what the Bolsheviki wantonly have done to deteriorate and disorganize the railroads, I am convinced that we cannot think of turning them over to the Bolshevist conception of control," he said. "It would mean their ruin. When I see what the Bolsheviki in their madness have wrought, I can say with sadness, 'They know not what they do.' To this stage, alas, have we arrived in Russia."

M. Oustrougoff admitted that the workmen had not been paid for two months, but explained that this was due to inability of the Government to print sufficient small money because the printing facilities were in the hands of the Bolsheviki. He said that the world must realize that anarchy had made Siberia destitute of even rudimentary necessities, but added that the Government was rushing substitutes.

In bringing the interview to an end, he declared he was convinced that the workmen would respond when they realized that the world was backing them and that Americans were actively helping.

NORTH RUSSIA REFUSES TO MEET RED ENVOYS

Premier Tschaikovsky Calls Allies' Parley Proposal Impractical and Humiliating.

LONDON, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.)—Nicholas Tschaikovsky, President of the Provisional Government of North Russia, who is in London on his way to Paris in connection with the Peace Conference, in an interview today fully indorsed the view already given by Lieut. Gen. Eugene Karlovitch Miller, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the same Government, that it would be impossible to meet the Bolsheviki at Prinkiro, (one of the Princes Islands.) He declared that Bolshevist rule stood for tyranny and terrorism, atrocities, and the abolition of all discipline.

Protesting against the statesmen at Paris treating the Bolsheviki as though they were a political party, President Tschaikovsky said:

"So long as Bolshevism is alive there can be no peace in Russia, and therefore no peace in Europe. If Russia is not represented at the Peace Conference, its conditions are not binding on Russia, and all the Slavonic nations, who look to Russia as their head, will morally be left out of account. Then your League of Nations would never be realized.

"The Allies must find some organic solution of the Russian problem, not merely wave it away as has been done by the Prinkiro invitation, which is not only impracticable, but humiliating to the representatives of Russia as a State. Don't ask us. Fighting Bolshevism, we cannot. We must fight to the death or Russia will perish."

DUTCH BANK LOOTED BY REDS.

Rotterdam Institution's Experiment in Petrograd Ends Disastrously.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 31.—THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learns that the Rotterdamsche Bank, which has German interests, was persuaded last Summer to maintain a bank in Petrograd.

After having received a report there that there were elements of order in Bolshevism, that the Bolsheviki represented a certain organization, that the peasant elements were conservative, and that it was not impossible for a financial establishment to maintain its position in Petrograd, the Rotterdamsche Bank sent two agents there. These agents have just returned to Holland after perilous adventures of which they will not speak.

The bank was completely pillaged by the Bolsheviki, who took its money deposits, papers, and shares, transporting them to the National Russian Bank, as also its books. The incident was considered as a complete débâcle in the financial world, which takes unusual interest in Russian finance, owing to the numerous Dutch holders of Russian shares and bonds. The Dutch agents had an adventurous journey, even their wearing apparel being stolen from their backs, and one was tried and condemned to death at Reval by a beautiful woman who asked the prisoner if he had anything to say.

"Yes, I'm pleased to be condemned by a beautiful woman," said the prisoner, whereupon the female judge began to exchange ideas with him, finally pardoned him, and gave both a laisser passer.

BOLSHEVIKI MENACE KIEV.

Ukraine Government Removes from There to Winnitza.

VIENNA, Feb. 1.—The advance of Bolshevist troops into the Ukraine has compelled the Ukrainian Government to move from Kiev to Winnitza, in Podolia, southwest of Kiev.

Recent dispatches reported that a Franco-Rumanian army had occupied Kiev, arriving by way of Bessarabia.

MOVE TO SOCIALIZE BIG PLANT.

German Factory Forced to Keep Surplus Men on Its Payroll.

BERLIN, Feb. 1, (Associated Press.)—Owing to lack of orders, Rehenutz's metal ware and machine manufactory at Düsseldorf has been forced to lay off several thousand employes.

When the decision of the company became known to the workers, they threatened the destruction of the plant. The company is being compelled to keep 15,000 men on its payroll, although it has work for only 1,000.

The Spartacides on Friday decided to proceed at once with the socialisation of this plant, which is one of the largest in Rhenish Russia.

JOY IN MANY LANDS OVER FOOD RELIEF

Hoover Says $100,000,000 Fund Lifts Load of Fear from Hearts of Millions.

SUPPLIES ALREADY ON WAY

One Hundred Cargoes in European Ports or On Way—Army Helps with Distribution.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—The passage by the American Congress of the bill appropriating $100,000,000 for relief in Europe "will lift a load of fear from the hearts of millions of people in Europe," said Herbert C. Hoover, Director General of Relief, in a statement issued this evening. Mr. Hoover outlined the use to which the money is to be put and the means already taken for the relief of various peoples.

"It is little realized in the United States," the statement adds, "how fully and completely the daily wireless carried the progress of this measure to those peoples now liberated from the German yoke. Immediately after the bill was passed the news appeared in the headlines of newspapers in Bucharest, Sofia, and Helsingfors, and it was known in Warsaw, Lodz, Prague, and Fiume, where thousands of persons have been looking anxiously toward the United States for leadership in the solution of their most imminent danger.

"It must be remembered that the President's declaration of the prime purposes of the American people in reestablishing freedom and self-government had moved these peoples to direct all their hopes toward the United States, and today they will see one more step toward this end.

"There is no question as to the sacrifice it will call for from the American people to provide this relief appropriation, as it comes now in a period when we have so many difficulties and problems of our own people to solve in the rehabilitation of our normal national life.

"The usual tangible relief to the newly liberated peoples will not be delayed even by the period required to ship foodstuffs from the United States under this appropriation because the War, Navy, and Treasury Departments and the United States Food Administration already have 100 ships in European ports or headed toward Europe in addition to our re-established relief in Belgium and Northern France, Rumania, and Czechoslovak under the old war legislation. The new appropriation by Congress enables us to extend this work by giving credits to those countries for which there was no such legislation.

"We have at sea or discharging in the port of Trieste 70,000 tons of food for the Jugoslavs, Serbians and Czechoslovaks. We have 30,000 tons of food either arrived at or in progress to the Black Sea for Rumania. The Armenian Relief Committee has 7,000 tons on the way to Armenia and Syria as a gift, and we are placing 10,000 tons in Constantinople as a reserve for them. We have 40,000 tons in Poland, on the way or being transshipped from Rotterdam for the Poles, and 20,000 tons in Rotterdam awaiting reshipment to the Finns and other liberated populations in Russia. The Polish Relief Committee is sending a gift of 7,000 tons to the Poles.

"Since the armistice the British authorities have distributed about 10,000 tons of food to the Serbians, the Italian authorities some 10,000 tons to the Austrians, and the British authorities have in progress some 12,000 or 15,000 tons of food to the Rumanians. We have since the armistice delivered into Rotterdam 300,000 tons of food for the Belgians and the liberated French, with the support of our treasury and Belgium and France.

"Had this new appropriation been refused we should have sold out these parcels of food to those who could pay real money and would have been compelled to allow the others to starve. In this same confidence that we would be supported by Congress, we have secured a detail of more than 250 men from the American Army and the American Navy for the work of the Food Administration. These men are now actively establishing the administrations necessary to secure proper distribution in all of these territories. Our offices have been opened in virtually every capital among the distressed peoples, and with the passage of this act of Congress we are able to do business.

"The Allied Supreme Council of Supply and Relief has been organized and equipped with a staff and officials representing the allied and associated powers in order that we may secure coordination and unity of effort from all the Governments who have stood together to secure the freedom of these peoples and who now stand together to see that their distress is ameliorated."

SYRIANS APPEAL TO WILSON.

National League Urges Self-Determination of Syria at Peace Table.

Concerned over the report that he Peace Conference was considering plans which would abolish the racial solidarity of the Syrians, the New Syrian National League, with a reported membership of 150,000 throughout the country, yesterday sent a message to President Wilson. As given out by Emile Mernige, Director of the league, the message was:

To the President of the United States:

We, the undersigned Syrians of New York, respectfully petition that the standards of justice for nations which have been formulated by you, and which have been appealing alike to friend and foe, have hastened to a successful conclusion this great war, and that, therefore, the great and just principles of self-determination should be made applicable to Syria as well as to other small nations. We urge that Syria should remain undivided and should be given independence within the boundaries of its historic frontiers, namely, from the Taurus Mountains to the Egyptian borders, and from the Syrian Desert to the Mediterranean coast. All this land belongs to Syrians by right of occupancy for centuries.

We are firmly convinced that there will be no lasting peace unless the principle of "Syria to the Syrian people" is completely followed, and as our hatred toward our former Government, which enslaved us and deprived us of our rights, is known to every one, it must be concluded that this very same hatred will be renewed against any Government and any nation which shall endeavor to deprive the Syrian nation of its rights and territory.

The United States of America has hither to assisted Syria and its people and has within its borders a quarter million of Syrians, with 14,000 of them serving under its flag who will form a bond of union between their land of birth and their land of adoption.

We justly ask the restoration, reparation, and rehabitation of Syrians deported or despoiled being insisted upon. We urge self-determination and independence of Syria under the guardianship of the United States. The Syrian people are grateful to the valor of the allied armies who have liberated their mother country from the hated Turks, and undoubtedly wish to organize a central government in permanent form, in accordance with your memorable enunciation of the American doctrine of government. Your generous support at the Peace Conference, we believe, will be the solution of the age-long Syrian trouble and will add to the lustre of our country's greatness.

Our ability to convey the impression of individuality in simple tailored suits and dresses for young ladies from 14 to 19 years can be attributed to the fact that we confine ourselves entirely to the making of this type of apparel. SHOE CONSERVATION

W. H. Kelley, a lumber salesman, of Omaha, found Neōlin Soles so tough and durable that one pair of soles served on a second pair of uppers after the first pair of uppers had worn out in ten months of hard walking.

And he says, "Those same soles will stand another ten months of constant daily wear."

This is unusual service even for Neōlin Soles but Mr. Kelley's experience should indicate to you a method of cutting down those rising shoe bills you have to meet. Simply make sure the new shoes you buy are Neōlin-soled and have worn shoes repaired with these soles which are scientifically made to be comfortable, waterproof and exceedingly long-wearing. They are made by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio, who also make Wingfoot Heels, guaranteed to outwear any other heels.

TELLS OF SAVINGS IN RAIL OPERATION

Director Smith Reports $23,248,000 as the Result of Economies in Eastern Region.

GREAT TROOP MOVEMENT

More Than 3,308,000 Officers and Men Carried by 7,567 Trains in the Year.

The annual report of A. H. Smith, Regional Director of Railroads for the Eastern Region, covering operations for the year ended Dec. 31, asserts that the first complete year of unified Government operation resulted in saving $23,248,000. The saving is tabulated thus:

Dec. 31, 1917, to Dec. 31, 1918.

	Estimated Saving Per Annum.
(a) *Unification of terminals and stations	$4,172,000
(b) *Elimination of passenger service	12,190,000
(c) *Reductions in organization, as contrasted with the same under corporate control	3,677,000
(d) Miscellaneous economies, the result of causes other than above	3,209,000
Total	$23,248,000

*Does not include Allegheny or Pocahontas region roads part of the eastern territory prior to June 1. Includes Baltimore & Ohio and Pennsylvania lines west to Dec. 1.

In the year, the report says, there was a marked increase in eastbound traffic with a consequent increase in westbound movement of empties, the percentage of empty car miles to the total car miles for ten months showing an average increase of 2.6 per cent. as compared with the even period of 1917. This increase in unbalanced traffic, the bad weather of last Winter, the enhanced cost of material and supplies and the increases in wages are given as the outstanding factors in sending operating costs upward. It is asserted that most of these factors were operative throughout the year, while increased rates did not become effective until July 21.

Traffic Conditions Reviewed.

Reviewing traffic conditions throughout the year, the report says:

"The heaviest eastbound movement of the year was in June, the traffic falling off somewhat in July, August, and September. October showed a considerable increase, and following the signing of the armistice there was a falling off during the last half of November and the first week of December. However, the second ten days of December have shown a considerable increase, with "peak" days on which the movement has exceeded any previous day's movement during the year.

"On Feb. 6, 1918, there were a total of 161,000 cars above normal for movement in the Eastern territory; which was reduced to 76,000 on March 1; 60,000 on April 1; 41,000 on May 1, and to practically normal on June 1, since which time all traffic has been moved currently, with the exception of local accumulations on individual lines, which have been promptly disposed of through diversions and rerouting and the concentration of motive power in the congested districts.

"In general, it may be stated that railroad operations throughout the year have been conducted under most disadvantageous circumstances, with a heavy volume of traffic, due to the war demands; the severe weather of January and February; labor shortage, and a shortage of motive power, due to failure of the roads to receive locomotives ordered in 1916 and 1917 for use during the winter, the necessity for which was anticipated and orders placed with builders, but which it was impossible to secure delivery of, owing to the priority which it was necessary for the Government to exercise in building locomotives for service abroad."

"War industries and the drafts crippled the forces in all departments throughout the continuance of the war, and operations were handicapped on account of the necessity of employing inexperienced and inefficient help. The serious labor situation was accentuated by the widespread epidemic of Spanish influenza during the late summer and Autumn."

The report then turns to seriatim answers to questions propounded by William G. McAdoo, then Director General of Railroads. Consolidation of and reduction of passenger train schedules, the report says in answer to one of these questions, resulted in a decrease in 1918 as compared with 1917 of 16,253,914 passenger train miles, and a decrease of Pullman car miles totalling 41,229,702. Passengers carried one mile showed an increase of 403,810,471, or 4.7 per cent.

Tells of Troop Movement.

"In addition to the regular passenger travel, a large troop movement had to be accommodated, owing to the fact that the bulk of the overseas forces embarked from ports served by roads in this region," the report says.

"During the year there were 7,567 troop trains handled, a total of approximately 2,000,000 train miles, and carrying 3,308,496 officers and men; in addition to which the floating equipment of the roads in New York Harbor was largely used for transporting troops between New York and New Jersey and Long Island and from shore to the transports; a total of 1,885,000 men having been so carried."

Mr. Smith tells of keeping all the roads' purchasing agents in intimate touch with each other and with the markets through a regional purchasing committee, and adds that with the conclusion of hostilities old orders were canceled or reduced, and, in many instances, in anticipation of falling markets, open purchasing was resorted to instead of contracting ahead.

The report reviews miscellaneous economies, asserting that 100,000 cars were diverted from circuitous routes during the year, resulting in a saving of 7,800,000 car miles; that a campaign for "shipping days" to lessen the amount of less than carload freight resulted in a weekly scheduling of 1,232 more full carloads, and that "sailing days" will further increase the number of one and decrease that of the other. Revision and curtailment of passenger time tables and folders and new methods of distribution are credited with saving $351,344, while other specific economies, such as consolidation of freight service, combining single-track roads into double-track operation, adoption of the alternate day, and reduction in local train service, are said to have saved $664,000.

Co-operation of the Carriers.

Next the report reviews various kinds of co-operative action, the results of which, it says, are in the direction of efficiency, but "intangible as to economies." Among these are the diversion of traffic through the Pittsburgh Gateway, the Niagara frontier, to lake lines at Buffalo and in other directions, the routing of coal to Canada by water, the handling of special commodities in solid trains and the special movement of empty open-top cars to care for lake ore traffic.

The freight car situation is summed up as follows:

"On Nov. 30 Eastern region roads ownership of freight cars was 720,000; cars in service were 748,304; percentage of bad-order cars to cars in service, 6.1. Three thousand six hundred and nine bad-order cars required heavy repairs have been transferred to roads having excess facilities, repaired, and put in service.

"On Jan. 1, 1918, there were approximately 36,000 employes in the freight-car departments. On Nov. 23 the number was 42,500.

The report concludes:

"Among the features of interest that may be mentioned in reviewing the operations of the year and which have not been touched upon in the foregoing, are:

"(a) The close working relations established with the shipping representatives of the allied Governments and with the departments of the United States Government, and the co-operation received from these agencies, which facilitated in many ways the regulation and prompt handling of traffic.

"(b) The Lake coal and ore movement was followed vigorously throughout the year, and the volume of shipments offering was handled currently, with the result that there was a total of 29,388,242 tons of coal dumped at Lake ports prior to the close of navigation on the Great Lakes, or 917,963 tons in excess of 1917. The ore movement from the Lake ports for the season totaled 33,726,380 tons, which was 368,000 tons less than 1917; 1,622,000 tons less than 1916, and 6,343,000 tons in excess of 1915. The coal program was completed on Nov. 30 this year, as compared with Dec. 12 last year, and the tonnage handled was the largest on record.

"(c) To provide cars for the grain movement from the West, arrangements were made in the early Spring to move empty box cars in trainload lots via the most direct and economical routes to the grain territory west of the Mississippi River. On May 1 the lines in the Eastern region were carrying 115 per cent. ownership of box cars, which on Aug. 1 was reduced to 104.8 per cent., and is now less than 100 per cent. The interchange reports at Chicago show an increase of 122,773 empty cars delivered to connections at that point by Eastern region roads during the year. This movement of empties West has facilitated the movement of grain eastbound during the last several months.

"The transportation situation generally is normal at the present time on all railroads in the eastern region and traffic is being handled currently. A canvass of the business situation that has just been made indicates that there may be expected some decrease in traffic, due to the discontinuance of the war demands and buyers waiting for lower prices, with the probability that gross earnings will be somewhat lower for the first six months of the year than for the first six months of 1918, notwithstanding the increased rates.

"In closing, I wish to particularly mention and commend the officers and employes of these railroads for their tireless efforts and extreme loyalty during a year of unusual circumstances and tense situations. By such were we able to accomplish what was done, and I take great pleasure in having this opportunity to mention their patriotism."

INTEREST IN OIL MEN'S PLEA

But Americans in Paris Doubt if Mexican Affairs Will Figure There.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—The announcement in news dispatches from New York that representatives of British and American oil interests in Mexico were coming to Paris to lay their claims before the Peace Conference is attracting much attention in American Government circles and is causing speculation as to how Mexican affairs may be presented, if at all.

As Mexico has not been connected directly with the war, the opinion in official circles is that business interests of foreign powers which have suffered confiscation in Mexico probably cannot get a hearing in Paris until the Society of Nations has been organized fully and the main issues connected with the war have been passed upon. Under the Monroe Doctrine the United States naturally would be consulted before any steps were taken to bring about an adjustment of the friction between Mexico and foreign powers.

As a result, the Mexican difficulties are being watched eagerly because of the possibility that they may indicate how the Society of Nations will affect historic American policy.

HONOR NEGRO SOLDIERS.

Tablet Erected by Williamsbridge Civic League.

The names of forty-four negroes who gave their lives in the service of their country and of many more who served, are engraved on an honor tablet which was unveiled and dedicated yesterday at the headquarters of the Williamsbridge Civic League, 719 East 217th Street. James W. Randolph, President of the league, presided and addresses were made by Louis D. Gibbs, Bronx County Judge; J. Frank Wheaton, a negro attorney; Major W. H. Jackson of the 15th Regiment, Lieutenant S. E. Leaselle, and Lieutenant Marion Rudd.

Judge Gibbs praised the work of the negroes abroad. "By his heroism, his unselfishness," Judge Gibbs declared, "the negro soldier has leveled the barriers of race. As a soldier he has taken his place with the white fighter, and he has the right to demand equality in the new industrial and economic era which this country is to enjoy."

The Rev. Richard M. Bolden, pastor of the First Emanuel Church, offered the invocation, and a musical program concluded the ceremonies.

LANE WOULD EXPAND OUR POWER SUPPLY

Secretary Foresees Need of Vast Electric System to Link Eastern Cities.

SENDS APPEAL TO CONGRESS

Asks for $200,000 to Make a Survey —Outlines Basis of a National Policy.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—Predicting a greatly increased demand for power for use in industrial activity and expansion, Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, will tomorrow submit to Chairman Sherley of the House Appropriations Committee a request for an appropriation of $200,000 to be spent in making a special investigation and report on the power supply of the whole industrial region between Boston and the city of Washington.

Mr. Lane says that the investigation will form the basis for a constructive national policy of the highest industrial and economic significance.

"The country," Mr. Lane says in his letter, "is passing through a period of transition, which, I firmly believe, will soon be followed by one of industrial activity and expansion. The enormous development of war industries had created an almost insatiable demand for power, a demand that was overreaching the available supply with such rapidity that, had hostilities continued, it is certain that we should now be facing an extreme shortage of power. Such a crisis was averted by the signing of the armistice, and the ensuing curtailment in the demand for war materials has carried us past immediate danger of a power famine in the industrial districts of the Northeast."

One suggestion for a system of power supply which Secretary Lane favors is that steel tower transmission lines be constructed extending from the city of Boston westward past Worcester and Springfield, crossing the Hudson River in the vicinity of Newburg or Poughkeepsie, and then swinging southwest to Northern New Jersey and across the Delaware somewhere near Easton, crossing Southeastern Pennsylvania, inland from Philadelphia, striking the Susquehanna River below York, and then extending southwestward into the vicinity of Washington.

It has been suggested that such a trunk line could be tied to the existing power stations in Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Hartford, Poughkeepsie, New York City, Newark, Paterson, Trenton, South Bethlehem, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Chester, Harrisburg, York, Lancaster, Baltimore and Washington. Through such an inter-connection of existing large power stations, experts believe, a much higher efficiency can be obtained from existing power equipment, by taking advantage of differences in load conditions to obtain more complete use of the power equipment.

In the region between Boston and Washington there is power producing machinery capable of 8,500,000 horsepower, half of which is in industrial plants and the other half owned by public service corporations and electric railways. This equipment is being increased by from 500,000 to 1,000,000 horsepower annually. Secretary Lane's idea is that these additions of new equipment should be made in harmony with a comprehensive plan of power production to be determined upon in advance and followed in such manner as to bring into use the undeveloped water power as soon as possible.

"In a few months," the Secretary wrote, "and especially in the regions mentioned, I anticipate a greatly increased demand for energy, for which present facilities are inadequate. This demand will follow the resumption of industry under the operation of normal economic laws and in the face of international competition, factors that have been largely inoperative during the war. If the country is to reap the full benefit of this returning wave of activity it must be prepared to furnish industry and transportation with an adequate, dependable, and economical power supply. Only by increased economy in the production and distribution of power will it be possible for our manufacturers to decrease their production expenses and compete successfully in the world's markets, maintaining at the same time the American standard of wages and living.

"This result will be accomplished through the interconnection of existing power centres by means of a trunk line transmission system of high efficiency. Into this trunk line energy will be fed from hydroelectric plants and steam power stations located at tidewater and near the coal mines. From it will be taken the power required for each principal industrial centre and for the electrification of trunk line railroads and of such branch lines as may be located in metropolitan districts.

"Such a comprehensive system of power supply, making use of unutilized or undeveloped water power and of fuel now wasted at the mines, will result in large savings in coal. A very large amount of coal now consumed by steam power plants can be replaced by the development of water power. Fuel power can be developed near the mines and the wasteful transportation of coal by railroad to that extent avoided.

"I am reliably informed that as a conservative estimate 50 per cent. of the fuel now used by the railroads in this territory can be saved through the operation of trains by electricity instead of by steam locomotives, because of the much higher efficiency that can be obtained in the economical central station in comparison with the wasteful steam locomotive.

"The transmission of this energy as electricity instead of the hauling of coal by rail will relieve the railroads of this territory of an enormous freight burden, thereby making available transportation for the hauling of other commodities. Not only would the railroads in the immediate territory be relieved of hauling the coal for their own locomotives but other railroads supplying them with coal would be relieved proportionately. This easing of the present strain on trackage and equipment would result automatically in an increase in transportation facilities, the necessity for which the country is now facing."

REPRIMANDS OFFICER FOR FRATERNIZING

General Dickman's Reply to Criticism That Such Tendencies Are Unchecked.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Company.

COBLENZ, Feb. 1.—Maj. Gen. Dickman, commanding the 3d American Army, today replied to whispered criticism that the tendency of American troops in Germany to be friendly with the civilian population was allowed to go on unchecked. This reply came in a reprimand to a Second Lieutenant convicted by a general court martial of violation of the anti-fraternization rule. The offense was sitting and talking with German women in a café and continuing to do so after being warned by a Lieutenant of the Provost Marshal's office. The officer was fined $150 and reprimanded.

"Had no explicit orders existed denouncing conduct such as this officer has been convicted of and enunciating the broad policy of our relations with the enemy's civil population," says the reprimand, "it appears inconceivable that an officer of the Army of Occupation in Germany as a hostile force should be so far unmindful of his official status and the object and purpose of his presence in Germany as to have been guilty of the conduct alleged.

"It is obvious the accused is lacking in a proper appreciation of his position, and perhaps only through drastic action, after trial by general court-martial, can he be brought to a proper realization of the demands of his office and service, and be generally impressed with the seriousness of the failure to enforce and apply the principles enunciated by competent authority as to our relations at present with the enemy's civil population.

"The proprieties relating to the mode of life of those in the military service are elementary during the continuance of the present state of war with Germany, and the conduct disclosed in this trial is unbecoming to an officer of the occupying forces. The incident as disclosed and any other of its kind of a personal or public nature will, if persisted in, inevitably weaken the respect demanded of the enemy residents of the force, determination, and power of the United States."

WAR BOOMS BOY SCOUTING.

Organization Shows Growth of 144,000 in the Year 1918.

An increase of more than 144,000 scouts and scout leaders in the Boy Scouts of America between the day the United States entered the war and Dec. 31, 1918, was shown in a statement issued last night by the executives of the organization's National Council, who have been in session here. The figures respectively were 283,972 and 428,557.

At the annual meeting of the National Council next month a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt, prepared by Herman Hagedorn, who recently wrote a boys' life of the former President which the latter authorized, will be presented, "setting forth the virtues for which he stood and which should be the ideal of all engaged in scouting."

REDS FIERY IN BOSTON.

Bolshevism Urged at Liebknecht-Luxemburg Mass Meeting.

BOSTON, Feb. 2.—A "Liebknecht-Luxemburg memorial mass meeting" was held here today and announced as "the final meeting of Red Week." Several of the addresses were in Russian. A Russian Soviet banner was displayed, and most of those present wore red carnations.

James Larkin, the Sinn Fein leader, was the principal speaker. He denounced the American Federation of Labor and its head, Samuel Gompers, whom he criticised for "going over on the bridge deck" of a steamer to Europe and "never even going near the boys of the crew."

"He is over there trying to save the British Government," Larkin declared. He advised his hearers to go into labor unions and try to revolutionize them.

"Russia is the only place where men and women can be free," he said.

He charged that organized agents of a bourgeois Government were responsible for the deaths of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg. A large number of police and provost guards were present to watch the proceedings, but did not interfere with the meeting.

WAIT FOR MANUEL IN NORTH PORTUGAL

National Government Organized After Monarchist Victories.

ROYALISTS CLAIM BIG AREA

Madrid Reports That the Army Named the New Cabinet and the People Indorsed It.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—With Monarchist victories confirmed, a national government has been constituted in Portugal, with Senhor Conceiro as Premier and Minister of War, according to a dispatch received from Oporto. The message declares the monarchists control a large part of Portugal and are awaiting the arrival of former King Manuel.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—A dispatch received today from Portugal by way of Madrid says a National Government has been constituted as follows:

Premier and Minister of War and of Food—PIAYA CONCEIRO.
Minister of the Interoir—Senhor SOLLARA ALEGRO.
Minister of Justice, Finance, and Religion—Viscount BANHO.
Minister of Education, Agriculture, Commerce, and Industry—Count AZEVEDO.
Minister of Foreign Affairs — LOUIS MAGALAHES.
Minister of Public Works and Transportation—Senhor SILVARAMOS.

The dispatch adds that the Government, which was named by the army, has been welcomed by the people with enthusiasm. It says also that the Government, which is exercising its authority, is awaiting the arrival of former King Manuel.

An official statement issued by the Royalist Government at Oporto reads:

"All the northern troops are faithful to the monarchy. The republican troops at Albergh and Riavelha have fled before the forces of Colonel Cotereal. Telegraph and telephone communication with Lisbon has been broken. The defense organized by the republican Government fails more and more because several garrisons are favoring the monarchy.

Dispatches from Lisbon state that a royalist column was put to flight north of Dagudea and the commander killed. Coimbra is reported quiet. Royalist prisoners at Veiro and Vizeu have been placed in prison at Figueira.

The Government, the reports add, has asked the civil Governors to remain at their posts during the strife. A strike of the railway men of Southern Portugal has been terminated.

GERMANS RENEW PROTESTS.

Complain That Surrender of Rolling Stock Causes Hardships.

COBLENZ, Feb. 2, (Associated Press.) —Insistence by the Allies upon the prompt compliance with the armistice terms has brought numerous protests from German communities, which point out that until the balance is adjusted improvement in the economic situation cannot be expected.

The business men of Essen explain that from their district alone in the last few weeks 24,000 cars and 5,000 locomotives have been delivered to the Allies. They declare that as a result traffic has been greatly reduced.

It is claimed that what is true in the Essen district is similar in other parts of the country, where traffic has been reduced to a minimum. It is asserted that the food and fuel shortage, already serious, has been made more so by the inability to move supplies. The food shortage in the Coblenz area is bad, but it is perhaps not so serious as at Cologne, a much larger city, where there has been a greater influx of discharged soldiers.

The population is returning to work as rapidly as possible but the inability to procure fuel supplies has delayed the reopening of many places and employment of many men has been made impossible. The farmers are preparing for their Spring work throughout the occupied area. Restocking of farms is progressing rapidly. A canvass within the area of the 32d Division shows that the farmers now have 754 horses, as against 383 Nov. 11.

GLASS LAYS RUMOR OF TREASURY GAIN

Denies Story That $15,000,000,000 to $17,000,000,000 Was Returned After Armistice.

EXPLAINS FISCAL POSITION

Proceeds of Loans Expended or Anticipated by Certificates When Fighting Stopped.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—Secretary Carter Glass, of the Treasury Department, denied tonight current rumors that as a result of the signing of the armistice large unexpended funds had been turned back into the Treasury, thus making it unnecessary for another Liberty Loan to be floated.

As a matter of fact the Government has been forced to borrow $4,231,890,500 through the putting out of seven issues of Treasury certificates since Nov. 7 and is bending every energy toward bringing about the promptest possible enactment of the $6,000,000,000 War Revenue bill and for the floating of the fifth loan, which is expected to range between $5,000,000,000 and $6,000,000,000.

Between June 25 and Oct. 1 the Government borrowed $4,659,820,000 on Treasury certificates, the latest of which matured last Thursday. The total obtained from the Fourth Liberty Loan was a little less than $7,000,000,000, and, as explained by Secretary Glass, the net proceeds of that loan in excess of the Treasury certificates which had to be retired from the Fourth Liberty Loan amounted to about $2,300,000,000.

Mr. Glass then points out that the cash expenditures of the Government in December alone were $2,000,000,000 and that in October, November, and December the Government spent $5,661,087,425.40. If this rate were maintained for a year it would mean an expenditure of $20,000,000,000. Treasury officials have estimated that the expenditure up to June 30 next, would be $18,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1919.

How the Rumor Started.

"A rumor has reached the Treasury," said Mr. Glass, "that a mistake has been made by the authorities and that from $15,000,000,000 to $17,000,000,000 has been returned to the Treasury as a result of the armistice and that therefore another Liberty Loan is unnecessary. The rumor is absolutely unfounded. I suppose it has its origin in a failure to understand the discussion of the proposed repeal by Congress of $15,000,000,000 of appropriations and authorities. This does not mean a return of money to the Treasury, but a cancellation of authority heretofore given by Congress to expend money in the future. Such reduction in future expenditures was anticipated by Secretary McAdoo and fully allowed for when on Nov. 14 he wrote to Senator Simmons forecasting an expenditure of some $18,000,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and suggesting a reduction of taxes for that year to $6,000,000,000 and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, to $4,000,000,000.

"As a matter of fact, the whole proceeds of the Fourth Liberty Loan and of all previous loans had at the time the armistice was signed been expended or anticipated by Treasury certificates of indebtedness issued during the Summer and early Fall to finance the current requirements of the Government, and at that time outstanding and unpaid. It has been the practice of the Treasury since the beginning of the war to finance the current requirements of the Government by the issue of Treasury certificates of indebtedness of short maturity at frequent intervals before each Liberty Loan and to refund these Treasury certificates from time to time by the sale of Liberty bonds. This practice was followed in advance of each of the four Liberty Loans so that when any Liberty Loan was actually offered for subscription and the proceeds reached the Treasury only a very small part was available for the future requirements of the Government, the greater part of the proceeds being required to retire the short-time Treasury certificates of indebtedness issued in anticipation of the loan.

"The aggregate amount of Treasury certificates thus issued from June 25, 1918 to Oct. 1, 1918, was $4,650,820,000. These certificates had varying maturities, the earliest being Oct. 24, 1918, and the latest Jan. 30, 1919. The total amount of the Fourth Liberty Loan was a little under $7,000,000,000, payable in installments from Oct. 24, 1918, to Jan. 30, 1919, so that the net proceeds of the Fourth Liberty Loan in excess of the Treasury certificates which had to be retired from those proceeds were about $2,300,000,000. The cash expenditures of the Government other than for the retirement of Treasury certificates and other items of the principal of the public debt during the months of October, November, and December alone were $5,661,087,425.40. The $2,300,000,000 net proceeds of the Fourth Liberty Loan were therefore soon exhausted. To meet the current expenditures of the Government since about the time of the armistice it has been necessary to borrow $4,231,890,500 on Treasury certificates maturing during the period ending July 1, 1919.

War Bills Must be Paid.

"At the moment the armistice was signed America was approaching the peak of her effort in men and materials. American industry was approaching the peak of production. It is safe to say that without the unstinted effort the war could not have been brought to so early a conclusion. The bills incurred during this period of great military and industrial effort must be paid. It takes weeks—sometimes months—for the bills so incurred to reach the Treasury in the form of actual demands for cash payments. A very large part of the expenditures made by the Government during the period since armistice day have been in payment of bills incurred prior to that date.

"Although the war is won, peace has not been signed. We must feed and pay our brave troops in France; we must share with the Allies the duty of bringing peace to the world, now that victory is ours. Our soldiers must be paid until the exigencies of the military situation permit their return to private life. They must be fed and clothed and transported back to their homes. Every effort is being made in every department of the Government to curtail expenditures with the utmost possible rapidity. But just as it was impossible for the United States to reach the peak of its war effort at the moment of the declaration of war (the expenditures, including loans to the Allies, grew at the average rate of $100,000,000 a month from less than $100,000,000 in March, 1917, to more than $2,000,000,000 in December 1918,) so it was impossible that the expenditures of the Government should stop abruptly at the moment of the signing of the armistice.

"That would have meant abandoning the Allies at the moment of victory, abandoning our soldiers in Europe without pay, repudiating the bills incurred by the Government for war materials and supplies, the destruction of the Government's credit, the wreck of our industrial and financial fabric and social and economic chaos."

TO EXHIBIT WAR PAINTINGS.

$2,000,000 British Collection to be Shown at Anderson Galleries.

A $2,000,000 collection of British official paintings of war scenes on the French front will be placed on exhibition in the Anderson Galleries beginning next Friday, according to an announcement made last night by a committee headed by Mrs. Charles B. Alexander and including Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mrs. George F. Baker, Jr., and Mrs. W. Goadby Loew. The paintings for the most part are the work of Sir William Orpen.

The canvases form a continuous and authoritative history of the war and were prepared under the direction of the British Ministry of Information. Mrs. Howard B. St. George, Sir William's cousin, and daughter of George F. Baker, speaking of the work of preparing the pictures, declared that the German High Command had been aware of the attempts being made to picture the war and had made every effort to prevent the paintings reaching London.

"Frequent raids by the enemy made it clear that these permanent records of German atrocities were to be destroyed if it were in his power to do so," said Mrs. St. George last night, "and, accordingly, as each canvas was completed it was removed by messenger to the air station behind the lines and in small quantities the paintings were sent across the Channel by airplane. It was equally necessary to exercise great care in sending the paintings over to this side, and never were more than ten or twelve pictures sent by the one ship."

CRIME WAVE YARNS LAID TO PROPAGANDA

Gen. Harts Tells of One That Incidentally Had Him Buying Necklace for Gaby Deslys.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

PARIS, Feb. 2.—That German propaganda is responsible for the persistent rumors that an American crime wave is raging in France, and particularly in Paris, is the belief among certain authorities of the American Expeditionary Force.

"It is propaganda undoubtedly, but I won't say it is German propaganda," said General W. W. Harts, commanding the Paris area, this afternoon. "Stories of lawlessness among the American troops in Paris are all entirely unfounded or grossly exaggerated. Prefect of Police Raux told me recently that the American soliders were well-behaved and finely disciplined, and that the French authorities practically never encountered trouble with them."

General Harts showed me an official statement by the former French Chief of Police, covering the eleven months of 1918 until Dec. 1 last, showing only thirty-nine charges against American soliders. Only three might be considered serious, which cases were complaints made that Americans had held up wayfarers. During December no serious charge was made. During January there were three charges of attempted murder, one charge of manslaughter, six charges of robbery, and seven charges of automobile thefts.

The attempted murder and manslaughter cases occurred when the French police discovered a band of Americans and Australians looting freight cars. In the revolver battle that followed two French policemen were fatally wounded, after killing two American robbers.

"Here is an instance of propaganda," General Harts said. "It is reported that my own automobile was stolen the other day while I was in Cartier's jewelry store in the Rue de la Paix buying a pearl necklace for Gaby Deslys.

"Maxim's insisted on selling spirits to American enlisted men and officers. I reported the infraction of the French law. The French authorities closed the place to every one in uniform."

Salvation Army Issues a Call for Volunteers for the Work.

The Salvation Army announced yesterday that it had issued a call for volunteers to establish canteens and huts with the American soldiers in Alaska who have been neglected while soldiers in all other parts of the world have received attention. Supplies and workers will be sent to Alaska as soon as navigation opens in the Spring.

"Salvation Army workers already have answered the call," said the announcement, "but the arduous character of the work and the rigors of the climate are so great as to demand workers of exceptional physique and stamina and, although there is no lack of volunteers, few have been selected yet."

Mrs. Theodore Thomas of Boston, requested the Salvation Army to begin welfare work among the soldiers in Alaska, recalling that they enlisted to fight in France and were assigned to the desolate job of guarding the Matanuska coal fields near Anchorage. During the heavy Winter the men were cut off from communication with the outside world, except by dog teams, and in the Summer they were annoyed by mosquitoes from the vast swamps near their camps.

Escapes Death Under a Train.

Theodore Meyers, a mechanic, living at the Mills Hotel, at Thirty-sixth Street and Seventh Avenue, narrowly escaped death yesterday afternoon when he fell from the platform of the Tremont Avenue station of the Third Avenue elevated road in the Bronx, in front of a train. Although the trucks of the first two cars passed over him he escaped with bruises. Meyers was seized with a fainting spell as the train approached the station and rolled from the platform.

A letter from
HAROLD BAUER

The Aeolian Company. New York, October 22, 1918
Gentlemen:—

It has taken me several years to decide to play exclusively for the Duo-Art. My hesitation was not due to any doubt as to the superior excellence of your instrument, but because, in view of still further improvements which the future seemed to promise, I thought it advisable to wait before taking an irrevocable step.

It is indeed a matter of the most serious importance to an artist to determine the selection of an instrument which, through the means of a recorded roll of paper, will reproduce his playing and carry it all over the world. Where one person will hear the performance of the artist himself, thousands will listen to the music roll reproductions of his playing, and his reputation will gain or suffer according to the quality and fidelity of these reproductions.

In the last two years significant improvements have been made in both the recording and reproducing devices of the player-piano, and The Aeolian Company has carried these improvements to their highest development in the Duo-Art Piano. It is difficult indeed to see in what direction further progress can be made or suggested.

In fidelity of production, in brilliancy, power, delicacy, quality and variety of tone the vast superiority of the Duo-Art over all similar instruments is now definitely established. The Duo-Art stands supreme among reproducing pianos and I need no longer hesitate to identify myself with it and to entrust it with my reputation. I am most happy to avail myself of such a wonderful means of leaving to posterity a record, as nearly perfect as can be conceived, of my interpretative art.

Yours very truly,

Harold Bauer

The DUO-ART PIANO
And the Great Pianists

Paderewski

Last November, The Aeolian Company announced that under the terms of a special agreement Ignace Jan Paderewski would in the future record his interpretations in the form of music-rolls, exclusively for the Duo-Art Piano. It also published in this announcement a letter from Paderewski in which he congratulated the Company upon the "splendid achievement" of the Duo-Art and expressed his appreciation of the "manifest fidelity" with which it reproduced his playing.

Josef Hofmann

A few weeks later a second announcement was made that Josef Hofmann would also make music-rolls for the Duo-Art Piano exclusively in the future. In the letter from Hofmann accompanying this announcement, he called the Duo-Art a "wonderful instrument" and stated that "its reproduction of his playing was so superior to that of any other instrument as to furnish no real basis for comparison."

And Now Harold Bauer

And now comes the announcement that Harold Bauer, another of the small group of world-famous pianists, has made a similar agreement with The Aeolian Company. Bauer's interpretations in the form of music-rolls will also be made in the future exclusively for the Duo-Art. His letter, reproduced above, explains fully his reasons for taking this step. And also why musicians of such pre-eminence and attainment select the Duo-Art for such significant approval.

Paderewski, Hofmann, Bauer—names not only of international celebrity as denoting musicians but also as designating men of broad mental calibre and influential standing. The dictum of these masters, regarding matters pertaining to their art, is absolute and final. Their enthusiastic approval of such an instrument as the Duo-Art is sufficient to arouse the interest and awaken the spirit of investigation of every musician and lover of the art of music.

What the Duo-Art Piano Is

The Duo-Art Piano is fully worthy such unprecedented endorsement. Its value to the art of music and to the music-lover is beyond computation. By means of the special music rolls referred to in connection with these great musicians, the Duo-Art Piano will reproduce their playing with such absolute fidelity of detail, that the reproduction is not to be distinguished from the original performance.

This means, nothing more nor less, than that the possessor of a Duo-Art Piano commands the services of Paderewski, Hofmann, Bauer and all the other famous musicians who are making Duo-Art Music Rolls, to play for him at his will, for his pleasure, benefit and educational advantage. No such privilege has ever been accessible to a music-lover before because no such instrument as the Duo-Art Piano has ever been hitherto available.

Three Great Instruments In One

Besides its wonderful reproducing feature, the Duo-Art Piano is an instrument upon which anyone without musical skill can play practically all piano music, and play it well. For it is also the original Pianola—providing a wonderful technic which you may employ for self-expression in music. The fascination of striving for the same effects that the great masters display in their Record-Rolls, the wonderful privilege of the Pianola, may be imagined.

Also, finally, the Duo-Art Piano is a pianoforte of highest excellence. Its desirability as an instrument for hand playing is entirely unaffected by the two Arts which so greatly enhance its value, and broaden its scope. The Duo-Art Pianola Piano is obtainable in the Steinway, Steck, Stroud, and celebrated Weber Piano at prices ranging from $97[illegible].

CELTIC ARRIVES WITH GAS TROOPS

Six Companies of First Regiment That Fought from Flanders to the Vosges, Back.

REFUSED TO RETIRE

Col. Hayward of Old Fifteenth, Colored, Told French Officer "My Men Go Forward or Die."

The United States battleship Connecticut and the British transport Celtic arrived yesterday from Brest with 4,060, chiefly members of the First Gas Regiment, sanitary units, aero squads, and casual companies.

The gas regiment arrived on the Celtic, and was composed of six companies of 250 men each, commanded by Major John B. Carlock of San Francisco, and was the only offensive gas troops that were used by the American Army in France. After being with the British for three months the regiment entered the first American sector in May, 1918, and from that time until the armistice was signed was moved about to every sector from Flanders to the Vosges. The hardest work was on the Argonne front, where the officers and men worked continually for forty days out of forty-nine without any rest

"Very little was known in the United States of our operations," said Major Carlock yesterday, "because nothing was allowed to leak out. The nature of our work made it imperative that the greatest secrecy should be maintained and this was strictly carried out.

Tells of Gas Work.

"We used three kinds of gas attacks in our offensive—there was the cylinder, the projector, and the four-inch Stokes mortar. The cylinders usually weighed from 60 to 70 pounds of liquid gas. We would take from 500 to 5,000 of these deadly machines into action on one front and turn them on simultaneously. They were used exclusively for trench warfare.

"The projectors were used in attacks on concentrated enemy troops along stabilized fronts or in mobile warfare. They were sixty pound bombs that contained thirty pounds of gas, installed in batteries of from 20 to 5,000, and were discharged electrically. These, with the four-inch Stokes mortars firing gas of various kinds, thermite, and high explosives, were used to render possible the advance of the infantry without incurring excessive casualties, and also for destroying machine gun nests or other strong points on the enemy's front lines.

"At the beginning of the Argonne attack on Sept. 26 the two most formidable positions in the enemy front line were Hill 263, on the edge of the forest, and a huge knob on which was the ruined village of Vauquois, about two miles to the east. It was almost impossible to take these points by direct assault. The gas troops flooded these positions just before the attack began with white hot molten metal, gas, liquid fire, and smoke, after which the first wave battalions passed between and around these strong points with very little interference. They were also of great use in laying smoke screens to cover the advance of the infantry, and also to draw artillery fire. The Vesle success on Nov. 10, when the United States Marines crossed the Meuse, was brought about largely by our smoke screens.

Regiment Lost Heavily.

"It is not generally known that the gas regiments by leading as they did every offensive were subjected to greater danger than perhaps any other. This is borne out by the fact that 50 per cent. of our regiment are casualties, mostly the result of machine gun fire. This extended to the officers also in a marked degree.

"The Major added that at the time the armistice was signed there were two regiments and three battalions in training, so that the gas warfare would have played a prominent part had the war continued. Major Carlock paid a tribute to the 77th Division for its wonderful work and tenancity in holding out against heavy odds. Among the members of the gas regiment who returned yesterday were eighty wearing the French War Cross, twenty had the D. S. C., and twelve of the officers have been recommended for the D. S. M.

Another passenger on the Celtic was Major C. H. Brent, Chief Chaplain with the American forces. He said that the behavior of the men in France reflected the greatest credit on the American nation and he had not heard a word of complaint. "I was with New York's 42d, 27th, and 77th Divisions," he said, "and this city may be proud of its men."

Others on the Celtic were Lieut. Col. Wade H. Hayes and Lieutenant Charles P. Porter of the 147th Aero Squadron of New Rochelle, who was credited officially with bringing down four machines. He won the D. S. C. and palm and the Croix de Guerre.

Part of 165th Ready to Sail.

The battleship Connecticut brought 955 officers and men. The officers said that when the warship left Brest on Jan. 20, two battalions of the 165th Infantry, the old 69th, were there completely mobilized for embarkation to return home.

Among the troops on board was the casual company of 150 Marines that originally belonged to the Fifth and Sixth Regiments. They were among the first of the Marines to go to France, and some of them had been there twenty months. Lieut. Henry Barber, 21 years old, said to be the youngest officer in the Marines, was wounded twice, the first time in Belleau Woods, when his hip and knee were shattered by shrapnel, and later he was gassed at Soissons. While lying on the end of a big auto truck on his way to the hospital he saw Lieut. David Redford, who came from his State, Michigan, and had been wounded in the right arm. Lieut. Redford was placed on the truck beside Barber, when almost immediately a shell burst overhead, killing Lieutenant Redford. Barber was blown across a hedge into a field.

There were fifteen members of the 369th on the Connecticut who fought under Colonel Hayward and were on their way back to South Carolina.

"Turn back, I should say we would not. We're going through there, or we don't come back," was what Colonel William Hayward, Commander of the 369th Regiment, formerly the 15th Colored New York National Guard, said, according to Sergeant John Jamison of No. 137 West 141st Street, Manhattan, a member of Company K, 369th Infantry.

"It was at Belleau Woods, on June 6. Previous to this we had fought through several small engagements, but this day we were fighting with the French, with whom we were brigaded. We came up to the German front lines and there we met the heaviest attack, which was a counterattack to our advance.

Hayward: "They Go Forward or Die."

"Colonel Hayward tore off the 'eagles' of his insignia, grasped a gun from a soldier, and darted out ahead of the rest of Company K. We went through a barrage of German artillery that was poured down upon us. A French General ordered us to retire. Colonel Hayward, who, of course, was under direct command of this French General, said:

"'I do not understand you.'

"Then the French General raised his arms above his head and cried:

"'Retire. Retire.'

"And then Colonel Hayward, with his hat knocked off, came running up and cried:

"'My men never retire. They go forward, or they die.'"

Private James Carter of South Wilmington, Ill., Ninety-sixth Company, Sixth Marines, gave a graphic description of the storming of Bouresches on June 6 in a final attempt to take the town after nine days' fighting.

"There were 250 men in the company under command of Captain Donald Duncan when we started that morning," he said. "One hour after facing a terrific German barrage, Captain Duncan was killed, and Lieutenant Robinson took command. We faced a position so dangerous because of crossfiring that we could go no further.

"'Those who want to go into that can go; but orders from headquarters are that we can go back whenever we wish. Any man here that wants to go back, may do so with full honor,' said Lieutenant Robinson to his men.

"The answer was:

"'We never go back.'"

Seventeen of the Ninety-sixth Company came out of this fight alive.

In a cable message received last night from Colonel William Hayward of the 369th Infantry from Brest it was said that the First Battalion and the headquarters company of the regiment sailed from that port yesterday on board the transport Stockholm. The other battalions, the cablegram said, would probably sail Monday. Every borough of the city is said to be represented on the regiment's roster.

MAY CONTROL HOSPITAL.

Physicians and Surgeons College Discussing Co-operation with Lenox Hill.

A report was being discussed last night in academic circles in this city that an arrangement had been entered into between the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University and the Lenox Hill Hospital whereby Columbia would gain control of the hospital by having the largest representation on the board. Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia, said there were committees discussing possible methods of co-operation between the two institutions, but that no definite plan had been decided upon.

There is a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Columbia University today, but Dr. Butler said it was unlikely that anything concerning the situation would be ready for public announcement after the meeting. He thought some announcement might be made after the next meeting in March.

"This committee is appointed pursuant to the resolution of the Republican National Committee at its meeting in Chicago on Jan. 10," said Mr. Hays's statement. "The movement is in no sense partison, but is to be the means of giving the friends of Colonel Roosevelt a large way of expressing their regard for him, believing that the Roosevelt spirit will be an increasing force in American life. The nature of the memorial will not be determined until the committee has considered the suggestions which they ask from all. The expenses incident to the administration of the committee have been provided by friends, so that all money collected will be used entirely for the memorial itself."

A statement also was given out by Colonel Thompson saying that the office of the committee would be at 1 Madison Avenue. Colonel Thompson said:

"The committee wants the suggestions of Colonel Roosevelt's friends, the simple and obscure as well as the great and the famous, and subscriptions from those who believed in his principles for any amount either large or small. Our object is to crystallize into some binding form the spirit and teaching of this great American and to perpetuate in living ways the character, principles, and statesmanship that made the imperishable glory of his life."

The American Defense Society announced yesterday that memorial services for Colonel Roosevelt, who was Honorary President of the society, would be held by all branches throughout the country next Sunday. A service here will be held in Trinity Church, with the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning as the speaker, and it is expected that similar services will be held in at least 700 other cities and towns in the United States, Alaska, Porto Rico, and Hawaii. At all the meetings the last message of Colonel Roosevelt upon Americanism will be read. It was read at the Defense Society meeting in the Hippodrome on the day before Colonel Roosevelt died.

OPTIONS FOR MEMORIAL PARK.

Committee in Charge of Oyster Bay Project Will Get Them This Week.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Feb. 2.—Options will be obtained this week for the Roosevelt Memorial Park to be created by the citizens of this country. It will comprise about eighteen acres and contain a stadium and athletic field. Members of the Roosevelt Memorial Committee of Oyster Bay are to conduct a national campaign for funds to make the park a spot, which will be a mecca to visitors. Colonel Roosevelt always favored a park on the site selected, and it is expected by John F. Birmingham and Acosta Nichols that Republican State committees throughout the country will assist in the work. It is known that National Chairman Will Hays favors the idea and that he will be assisted by J. Hamlin Childs.

Contributions are being received daily from all parts of the country, the majority being from persons who remembered the Colonel and wished to contribute their "mite." On Feb. 9, the day set apart for memorial services for the late Colonel by Congress, services will be held here in the theatre. Father John L. Bedford of Brooklyn, a lifelong friend of Colonel Roosevelt, and Congressman Frederick Hicks will make addresses. Major General Leonard Wood has been invited to attend.

DERBY PRAISES 2d DIVISION.

Roosevelt's Son-in-Law Tells of Its Gallantry in Action.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Feb. 2.—Too much praise cannot be given to the Second Division, U. S. A., according to Lieut. Col. Richard Derby, son-in-law of the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, who only a few days ago returned from France. Dr. Derby with his unit arrived at Newport News and is spending a few days here with his wife.

The Colonel said that he believed that about one-fourth of the prisoners taken by the American Expeditionary Force were captured by the men of his division. Fully 30,000 casualties, he said, passed through the field hospital of the division.

In March, Dr. Derby said, the division was in the Verdun sector and remained there for two months and in May were taken to the northwest of Château-Thierry where they met the Germans and hel dthat section until July when they were relieved by the 26th Division. On July 18th the division attacked at Soissons with the 20th Morrocco Division and the 1st Division, U. S. A. The casualties in this attack, he said, were about 5,000 in three days. After fighting about Limey and at Thiaucourt, where an advance of twelve miles was made during September, the Colonel said the division on October 2nd with the Fourth French Army under General Gouraud, known as the "French Lion," attacked and took Blanc Mont Ridge. After this battle, the division was withdrawn until November 1st when it joined the 1st Division again and participated in the attacks about Commerance. On the day that the armistice was signed, the division crossed the Meuse River and participated in severe fighting.

Dr. Derby brought home news of Lieut. Col. Theodore and Capt. Kermit Roosevelt. Both sons of the former President are with the 1st Division. They participated in the last battle along the Meuse River. Lieut. Col. Roosevelt, he says, has two palms on his Croix de Guerre and has twice been recommended for the American Distinguished Service Cross. He had been severely wounded at Soissons in July while at the head of his division and also gassed. Dr. Derby says he walks with a limp and that the gas slightly affects his eyes.

Dr. Derby, himself, received the French war medal for bravery in visiting aid posts without regard to the artillery and machine gun fire. He was knocked down at one time by a shell.

MRS. ROOSEVELT TO SAIL.

Will Visit Her Sister and Her Sons and Quentin's Grave.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Feb. 2.—Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt will sail for Europe on Wednesday, going on the French liner Lorraine. How long she will remain abroad is not known.

While in Europe Mrs. Roosevelt will spend several weeks with her sister, Miss Emily Carow, who is doing war work in a hospital in Italy. She has not seen her sister in several years. She will also see her two sons, Lieut. Col. Theodore and Captain Kermit, while in France. This part of the trip was contemplated by Colonel Roosevelt just before he died. Mrs. Roosevelt also expects to visit the grave of her youngest son, Lieutenant Quentin, who was killed in battle with a German aviator.

Our mechanical force has been working on this batch for the past two months with the result that they are in good condition and ready to go into active service.

These sixty-seven cars have been overhauled and repainted, many of them have seen only a moderate amount of service. In some instances only the initiated could tell them from new cars.

Included in this sale are a number of Hudson Super-Six, open and closed models. You may not care to expend the money necessary for the purchase of a new Hudson—the proper course is to buy at this sale a used Hudson that has been put in serviceable condition.

Federal Trade Commission, Increased to Nine Members, Suggested as Regulatory Body.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—Vital modification of the Sherman and Clayton Anti-Trust Laws is being urged by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which announced tonight that it would refer to its membership, for a vote, proposals looking to the amendment of these laws and for the formulation of a "standard of business conduct," to be administered under strict Government supervision.

The proposals to be voted upon by the various business and commercial bodies throughout the country, as members of the national Chamber are four in number, and represent the results of special study made by the Chamber's Federal Trade Committee. In making these proposals the committee recommends the enlargement of the Federal Trade Commission and urges that its membership be raised from five, as at present, to nine, and that it be made a strict supervisory body. In this respect the Federal Trade Commission would bear much the same relation to Federal trade as the Interstate Commerce Commission bears to the railroads.

Recommendations of the Committee.

Following are the proposals to be voted upon:

1. The committee recommends that Congress should at once consider the situation of all statutes constituting our anti-trust legislation.

"2. The committee recommends that there should be formulated standards of general business conduct to be administered by a supervisory body.

"3. The committee recommends that an enlarged Federal Trade Commission should be made the supervisory body.

"4. The committee recommends that the membership of the Federal Trade Commission should be increased from five to nine."

The referendum is in line with the action of the Atlantic City conference last December, which was unanimously in favor of such modification of the Sherman law as would enable the business interests of the country to co-operate intelligently in conducting their affairs and increasing efficiency.

What the committee seeks to accomplish, apparently, is to dissipate the uncertainties of anti-trust legislation now existing, authorize closer co-operation among producers in the same line of business, and remove sections of the Sherman law alleged to be a handicap to business growth. The Government also would be asked to tell business what it could do, as well as what it could not, and to supervise business, to see that the bounds were not overstepped.

Problems of Readjustment.

"There is special occasion for such reconsideration of legislation of this character in the period of readjustment which will follow the close of the war," says the committee report. "In this period new and difficult economic problems will arise, for the control and solution of which existing legislation can scarcely be adequate. Many of these will be projected into the post-bellum period from the controls set up with official sanction during the war.

"At present there is an accumulation of twenty or more statutes resulting from about thirty years of legislation. Some of the provisions of these statutes involve difficulties which cause them to be seldom, if ever, invoked. An example is the section of the Sherman act which authorizes seizure and condemnation of goods. Even if it were conceded that in the course of some 180 proceedings which have been instituted by the Department of Justice the interpretation of the Sherman act has been established, later enactments have departed from the language of the Sherman act, and the new phrases leave great opportunity for perfectly honest doubt."

After pointing out that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States was committed by referendum in 1917 to remedial legislation to permit co-operative agreements, under Federal supervision, in industries which involve primary national resources, the resources in question including ores and deposits of useful metals and deposits of minerals which are sources of heat, light, and power, the committee says:

"Such a proposal as the chamber advocates in connection with natural resources should be so broadened in its scope as to contemplate conservation of all of our econmic resources. That prevention of waste in industrial and commercial activities—waste of labor, waste of executive direction, or waste of materials—is in the public interest will readily be admitted."

Respecting the recomendation that there should be formulated standards of general business conduct, to be administered by a supervisory body, the report says interlocking of directors among competitive corporations might be discouraged under a general prohibition, but with a provision that such interlocking might lawfully exist as to instances in which a regulatory body had made a prior determination that there would be no detriment to the public interest.

Attention is called to industries which in response to war needs have expanded to a capacity beyond the demand for their products in times of peace, and the report says:

Destructive Competition.

"There can be no public advantage in having a period of destructive competition ensue in such industries and continued until only the units that are strongest in financial resources survive, regardless of relative merits from an economic point of view. There should be regulation of excess capacities to the point where the capacity will reasonably correspond to present and future needs. To this end a form of temporary action in common might be made permissible in order that under adequate supervision such industries may solve their special problems. The decision whether or not in a particular industry such action should be allowed in the public interest, determination of the elements that should be dealt with, and supervision of the operation of the arrangements, should be in a regulatory body."

The co-operative agreements among producers of timber, coal, petroleum, and metaliferous ores advocated by the chamber, says the report, would undoubtedly include agreements as to prices. Unless such agreements were very carefully supervised in the public interest, the report continues, they would be apt to be detrimental to consumers.

"For exercising the supervisory functions proposed," the report says, "the appropriate agency is obviously the Federal Trade Commission. In an earlier report we had occasion to call attention to recent departures by the commission from the purposes of the law that created it. The report dealt only with the procedure and the point of view of the commission as at present constituted and included recommendations that existing vacancies in the commission's membership should be filled with men who would bring to the commission a proper conception of its duties and purposes.

"Such duties as the committee has suggested for the Federal Trade Commission will impose upon the commission greatly increased responsibilities to the public and the individual industries and will require constant attention to the whole field of production and distribution. For duties so extensive and important the membership of the commission should be enlarged."

COPENHAGEN, Feb. 1.—Yesterday, according to a special dispatch in the Berlingske Tidende of Christiania, the fishing steamer Egeria of Stavanger was blown up by a mine. Several men were killed.

The fishers fear new disasters from the mines in these waters. Bits of wreckage found indicate that another steamer has disappeared with its whole crew.

WILL TRY TO REVIVE TAX LEGISLATION

Kitchin Plans Resolution to Recast Luxury Schedule After Revenue Bill Passes.

POSTAL RATE RIDER, TOO

Senators Want to Abolish Zone System — New Moves Increase Likelihood of Extra Session.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—While the conferees on the $6,000,000,000 War Revenue bill have agreed and will report to Congress this week, the report, one of the conferees said tonight, will represent nothing more than a hasty attempt to complete a bill in time to be passed by Congress before the end of this session, which will expire by limitation in twenty-six legislative days.

Claude Kitchin, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, one of the conferees, informed his associates that he intended to rewrite the luxury and semi-luxury taxes by means of a joint resolution substituting schedules which would represent a greater degree of justice to the consumer and to the business man. He said he agreed with the protesting business men that the present schedules were so written as to make some of the taxes imposed impossible to collect and that they would put a premium on tax-dodging. In the Conference Committee it was pointed out that a tax of 10 per cent. on any article selling for twenty dollars could be avoided by fixing the price of the article to the consumer at $19.99.

Senators who opposed the proposed method of imposing the tax agreed to support the resolution, but informed Mr. Kitchin that this was a dangerous procedure, as the entire revenue legislation might be reopened after the bill had been sent to the President.

A lively debate in the Conference Committee was precipitated by Mr. Kitchin's announcement that he intended to try to correct the luxury taxes by means of supplementary legislation. One of the conferees suggested that there was a movement to repeal the second-class mail zone system by action similar to that proposed by Mr. Kitchin. His information was that the Senate Post Office Committee intended to try to repeal the zone system provision by means of a rider to the Post Office bill proposing the appointment by Congress of a committee to investigate the second-class rate.

Members fear that if these proposed plans are carried out Congress will find itself in a jam from which it will be impossible to extricate itself before March 4, and that the President will call a special session almost immediately. At the best, the prospect is that an extra session cannot be avoided. Very little progress has been made by the Senate in the disposition of supply measures, and the House has three of its biggest pieces of legislation to dispose of—the Navy bill, just reported; the Army bill, still in committee, and the conference report on the Revenue bill.

Some Republicans believe that Mr. Kitchin, with his strong views in regard to the newspapers and magazines, would not hesitate to tie up legislation in the House while fighting repeal of the zone system. What they want to do is to make him the instrument of forcing an extra session. At the same time they are content to place the Democratic Party on record on the zone system, feeling that the result would be of great campaign advantage next year. Republican leaders are largely committed to repealing the zone system, and, if they keep their promises, that system will be repealed and a higher general rate imposed on second-class mail, probably an increase of half a cent.

TAX THAT INCOMES MUST PAY.

Table Showing Assessments on Amounts Between $4,000 and $1,000,000.

With the passage of the pending Revenue bill it will be advisable for everybody having a taxable income to find out how much tax—normal tax and surtax—he will have to pay. The bill provides that married men may claim exemption from taxation of $2,000 of their incomes and single men $1,000, but on the balance up to $4,000 they must pay a tax of 6 per cent. On incomes of $4,000 and up to and including $1,000,000 the table printed below shows the amount of the normal tax, surtax, and total tax the married owners of incomes must pay:

150 Asleep in Gas-Filled Bathhouse.

A patron of Shumer's Turkish baths, 1,387 East New York Avenue, Brooklyn, swung a towel over a burning gas jet yesterday morning and put it out without shutting the cock. Some time afterward the escaping gas reached about 150 men who were asleep in the dormitories on the first and second floors. A crew from the Brooklyn Gas Company and several patrolmen and ambulance surgeons assisted in carrying a number of the patrons from the building. Ten men received treatment and then went home.

AGENT MUST RETURN $11,891

Befriended Columbus Woman to Relieve Her of Her Money.

A report filed in the Supreme Court yesterday by Julius T. Wright as referee shows how Mrs. Anne Eliza Miller of Columbus, Ohio, lost her small fortune while visiting in New York through an acquaintance she met two weeks after she came to the city. The referee reports that the man Mrs. Miller met was Daniel E. Wolfe, an insrance broker, formerly of 1,790 Broadway, who persuaded her to turn over to him cash and securities amounting to $11,306 and to give him absolute power of attorney to act for her in business matters.

Mrs. Miller sued Wolfe for an accounting, alleging that he had made false reports to her concerning the investment of her money, and after the courts had decided that Wolfe should account, and the Appellate Division had upheld the ruling, Mr. Wright was named to take the accounting and to report as to the sum due Mrs. Miller by Wolfe. The sum Wolfe must pay is $11,891, representing the original sum with interest.

The testimony showed that Wolfe sent many things to Mrs. Miller which she regarded as presents and which increased her confidence and affection for him, but which he really charged to her account. They included a diamond ring, fruit, candy and theatre tickets, as well as many long distance telephone calls made to Mrs. Miller when she was out of the city. When asked if the talks were always confined to business matters Mrs. Miller testified: "He usually only said, 'Hello, dearie, when are you coming home?'"

Mrs. Miller testified that she accompanied Mrs. Chittenden, a wealthy Columbus woman, on a trip to Central America as companion, and that on the day of sailing Wolfe slipped a $100 bill into her pocketbook "to buy herself something." She considered this a gift, along with fruit and silk wearing apparel also given by Wolfe, but they were all on her bill.

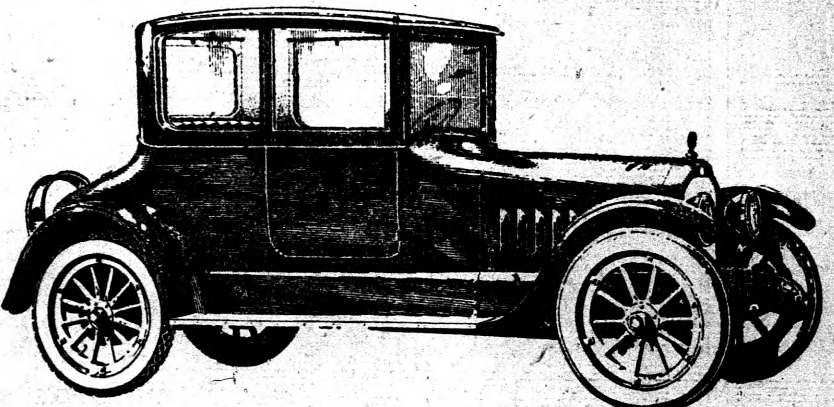
The Sporting Range



Peerless Closed Cars and the Double Power-Range

Closed cars that bear the name Peerless have ever been notable among the finest coaches built.

This season's models are no exception, in fact, in many respects surpass previous Peerless attainment.

The coach bodies—Coupe—Sedan—and Sedan-Limousine—are Peerless built by workmen who have made coach building an art—many of whom worked on the first Peerless Limousines that set the standard by which the fine Closed Cars of that day were judged.

The most distinctive advantage offered in any motor car today—two distinctly separate power ranges—gives the Peerless owner a contrasting performance that is especially desirable in Closed Cars.

In ordinary driving the thrifty "loafing" range gives a soft, smooth, easy performance that is a delight.

And its "sporting" range is instantly available to "pick up" these heavier bodies and lift them out of traffic jams, ahead of other cars—even those with the lighter open bodies.

And as a matter of fact, it is of importance to note that the Peerless Closed Cars are lighter than most open body models of cars of like class.

Let the Peerless dealer show you the luxurious Peerless Closed models—and demonstrate the special advantage they have in their Two-Power-Ranges.

CONSIDER NEW YORK WAR LOSSES LIGHT

Army Men Comment on Official Report of Casualties in 27th and 77th Divisions.

THEY SAW HEAVY FIGHTING

Officers of Both Organizations Are Credited with Showing Exceptional Leadership.

The 27th Division and the 77th Division, composed of New Yorkers, although fighting with a fury that won the commendation of the British and French veterans, went through the war with remarkably small casualty lists. An analysis of the tables of losses published in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday disclosed that the combat troops of both divisions lost only one in twenty killed in battle, while the total casualties, killed, wounded, and including prisoners, was only one out of eleven, facts which army men said yesterday indicated that the former National Guard officers and the officers trained at Plattsburg had shown exceptional leadership.

The casualties in the infantry units of the Twenty-seventh Division, including the 105th, 106th, 107th and 108th Regiments, was one out of seven; the killed in action in these organizations, however, being 1 out of twelve. In the 104th, 105th and 106th Artillery regiments of the former New oYrk National Guard, the casualties were strikingly light—only one out of every 133 men being reported killed, wounded or missing, while the killed in action ratio was one out of every 222 soldiers. Equally low were the ratios of casualties in the machine gun units and in the engineers of the division.

The 27th was trained at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., and went overseas in command of Major Gen. John F. O'Ryan. After a short period of overseas training—the division was about nine months at the South Carolina camp—it was brigaded with the British in Flanders. Under Field Marshal Haig the division covered itself with glory, and to the 106th and 107th Infantry has been given the credit for smashing the redoubtable Hindenburg line during the dawn of Sept. 29. The division saw weeks of almost ceaseless fighting, but came through with only the casualties tabulated below:

Unit.	Killed.	Died.	Missing.	Prisoners.	Total.
INFANTRY REGIMENTS.
105th	233	95	92	5	425
106th	315	77	137	134	663
107th	418	99	25	16	558
108th	248	85	56	3	392

ENGINEER REGIMENT.
102d	37	17	17	..	71
Total	1,302	404	330	158	2,194

The 77th Division, which prepared at Camp Upton, L. I., under the direction of the late Major Gen. J. Franklin Bell, went through a longer spell of training in France than did the 27th Division, but when it was flung into the battle line after a period at a quiet sector in Lorraine it found itself in the terrific Argonne fighting. Though launched against machine gun nests, although it had men whose no-surrender mettle was displayed in the famous "Lost Battalion" or in the heroic company at St. Juvin, the division came out of the conflict with a ratio of infantrymen killed in action as low as one out of every thirteen, but with every fifth man reported a casualty, either through disease, wounds, or missing.

The infantry units of the 77th are the 305th, 306th, 307th and 308th. Of these, the 308th suffered the heaviest, the regiment's total for all casualties being 682. The artillery organizations of the 77th lost one man out of every 71 through death on the battlefield, while every forty-third artilleryman figured as a casualty, a very high percentage, of course, now being back on duty with the Upton division. This shows the exact and official report on the war losses of the 77th Division:

Unit.	Killed.	Died.	Missing.	Prisoners.	Total.
INFANTRY REGIMENTS.
305th	262	150	119	..	531
306th	203	91	173	155	622
307th	320	132	85	71	608

302d	25	24	11	..	60

When last reported from France, the Upton division was in command of Major Gen. Robert Duncan, a West Pointer.

GMC Trucks at Pre-War Prices

The announcement of a reduction of $380 in the price of the GMC Model 16, ¾ ton truck, is good news to truck buyers.

Back of this action is an interesting story of war production of which little has been told.

The General Motors Truck Company is one of the largest builders of motor trucks. Prior to the close of the war fully 90% of its production was for the government.

But it was building GMC trucks for the government—GMC models selected by the government.

The enormous government demand made extensive improvement in manufacturing facilities necessary. The capacity was doubled and trebled and every possible efficiency measure adopted.

With war orders completed, we have proceeded without factory changes or alterations in design—we are continuing quantity production.

We are making the same high grade trucks that the government selected and standardized after they had been proved by years of government service and had successfully stood every test, under official scrutiny.

The reputation that GMC trucks have made, not only in government service, but among the best business concerns throughout the world, is one we are proud of.

We cannot afford to, and will not cheapen our trucks in any particular; we constantly make them better when we can.

But we can and have reduced the price on all six models of GMC trucks to the lowest point consistent with their high quality and a legitimate manufacturer's profit.

ASSORTED WEATHER

A customer called last Saturday wearing an old-fashioned ulster, one he'd bought here some thirty years ago. Said he wouldn't sell it for $100. Still good enough for the car, though not as smart as he'd like for the street.

It showed wear, real hard wear in spots, but what more could you ask from a coat that had weathered thirty Winters?

A new one was simply a matter of slipping on his size and sending the old one home.

Moral? "Good buy" or "Good Bye!"

BLUE ROCKS EVADE N. Y. A. C. GUNNERS

A. P. Bennett Turns In Best Score for High Scratch Prize at Travers Island.

New Conditions at Shoot Bring Out Unusually Large Field of Nimrods for Sunday Sport.

Although there was not much wind at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club, the Winged Foot gunners found considerable difficulty in "killing" the tiny blue rocks. As a result, the scores were not up to the average. Still, the gunners had an afternoon of excellent sport, principally because the new conditions gave every man a splendid chance at winning prizes. Probably the new conditions were responsible for a field of twenty-nine gunners reporting, one of the largest gatherings for a Sunday shoot ever seen at Travers Island.

A. P. Bennett was the high scratch gunner of the day, taking the all-important prize with a card of 96 out of a possible 100 targets. The high handicap gunner was H. B. Knight, who won out on a shoot-off. One of the new special cups at twenty-five targets also went to Mr. Knight. It was the handicap prize. The special scratch trophy was taken by A. L. Burns. The ghost targets also were thrown yesterday. Two were "killed" and two were missed. C. A. Brown and F. J. Ham were the gunners to hit the ghosts. W. J. Smith and J. Callahan lost the white targets.

The usual number of legs were scored on the regular fixtures. In the shoot for the Red Cross and the Accumulation cups, which are shot off together, no less than eleven gunners made full totals and were given legs. Eight turned the same trick in the shoot for the Tournament Cup. These events were at twenty-five targets each. In the Byronel Cup shoot at fifty targets, seven gunners scored.

The scores:

NEW YORK PLAYERS WIN.

Alexander and Hall Easily Take Tennis Doubles.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 2.—The Boston and New York intercity tennis matches ended today with exhibitions in mens' doubles. The New York men's team, Alfred Alexander and W. Merrill Hall, very easily disposed of Harry Johnson and Irving Wright of Boston, taking two straight sets, 6—1 and 6—2.

Myrick as partner, played against Mrs. George Wightman and Miss Marion Zinderstein of Boston. The vice president of the U. S. L. T. A. and Miss Goss established a good lead in the first set, but were overtaken and beaten, 7—5. Mrs. Wightman and Miss Zinderstein then took the second set, 6—2.

In the morning the match at the covered courts was between Fred Alexander with Mr. Myrick as partner and George Wightman and Edwin Sheaf of Boston. the home players won the first set, 7—5, but were beaten easily by the New Yorkers in the others, 6—3 and 6—1. Miss Bjurstedt returned to New York this afternoon but unless much better tomorrow she will not play in the Brooklyn women's tournament.

The scores follow:

Captain Tracy H. Lewis, 96; Daniel E. Smith, 88; C. E. Kline, 82; Captain Perry Graves, 77; Thomas O'Connell, 76; W. C. Poertner, 71; Bernard Kalker, 69.

ARONSON FIRST IN HIKE.

Marine Hero Leads Big Field in Pastime A. C. Walk.

Joseph Aronson of the Pastime A. C., one of the marine heroes of Belleau Wood, led home a large field of walkers yesterday in the four-and-one-half mile handicap hike of the Pastime A. C. Aronson started with a handicap of 5 minutes and 30 seconds. He took the lead when the field was entering upon the last mile of the course and held it thereafter. The victor's actual time was 37:25. Eddie Renz of the New York A. C., former national distance walking champion, started from scratch with Louis Labowitz, Pastime A. C. Renz finished fifth in 33:14, the fastest time recorded.

The order of finish follows:

J. Aronson, (5:30,) 37:25; H. Brady, (7:30,) 40:25; W. Fertig, (4:45,) 37:45; P. Anthony, (3:00,) 36:00; E. Renz, (scratch,) 33:14; F. Hill, (4:45,) 38:46; J. Cushing, (6:30,) 41:12; A. Arnold, (5:30,) 40:13; L. Labowitz, (scratch,) 34:39; W. Redey, (4:15,) 39:35.

TO DECIDE CHASE CASE THIS WEEK

Accused First Baseman Likely to Come to Giants at Once if Cleared.

It is expected that President John Heydler will render a decision this week in the Hal Chase case and thus clear the decks in the National League so that the managers can go ahead with their preparations for the Spring. The Chase case has been obstructing progress because it is known that if the first baseman is cleared of the charges brought against him he will figure in a trade at once.

The Giants are particularly concerned in the decision, for it is no secret that Manager John McGraw is waiting to put through a deal to bring Chase to New York if he is exonerated. This will complete the wide exchange of first basemen which has recently taken place. Undoubtedly Walter Holke will be sent to Brooklyn to replace Jake Daubert, who was traded to Cincinnati, and Chase will come to the Giants in a three cornered arrangement.

While Chase is waiting for a decision in his case his friends are confident he will be cleared. The testimony in the case was not made public, but it is known that Chase spent most of the afternoon of the trial on the stand, and it is said that he explained all the circumstances in the case made out against him. It is said that he even went further and explained previously unknown circumstances in connection with troubles he had in the past in the American League, particularly while he was with the Yankees. This evidence was offered because his past actions in baseball had been brought into the case.

If McGraw is able to include Chase on the New York roster, his main problems will be solved. He will have rounded out a team with which he will be ready to face the pennant race. Although he did not succeed in inducing Dave Robertson to return to baseball, McGraw does not expect much trouble with his other players. Robertson has long desired to retire and practice medicine and it was not a surprise that he turned down the offer from McGraw.

However, the New York manager has foregone a vacation in order to round up his players and will begin this week to get in touch with any who have not been fully satisfied with their new contracts. He does not anticipate much difficulty. This is the season when players make demands, but few complaints have been heard and McGraw expects to sign all his men before the end of the month.

Brooklyn is regarded as having profited by the trade with Cincinnati by which Jake Daubert went to the Reds for Shortstop Kopf and Outfielder Griffith. The Dodgers have long needed a capable shortstop, and of the many men tried out at that position by Manager Robinson none has been entirely satisfactory. Kopf should capably fill the weak spot in the Brooklyn infield, while Griffith is a steady if not brilliant outfielder.

Manager Robinson, however, is also waiting on the Chase case to complete his plans, since he now needs a first baseman. Should he get Holke from the Giants he will have the strongest club he has piloted since he won the pennant in 1916.

MEADOWLARKS WIN FIRST POLO MATCH

Defeat Rovers, 15 to 4, in the Phillips Cup Tourney.

The Meadowlarks polo trio scored the initial victory in the Phillips CCp tournament at Durland's Riding Academy, yesterday, when they overwhelmed the Rovers by 15 to 4. The victorious poloists conceded a handicap of one goal to the Rovers.

Max Phillips, donor of the tournament cup, played No. 2 for the successful team, and scored the most goals. From the start the Rovers were outclassed in horsemanship and stickwork. The score at the end of the first period stood 8 to 3, with the Meadowlarks on the long end. Phillips in this period annexed four goals, while Earle Hopping, at back, accounted for three. Dr. H. B. Blackwell, No. 2 on the Rovers, made his team's only scores in this period.

In the second period the Meadowlarks kept the Rovers almost continually on the defensive. Near the finish Goodman, at No. 1, scored the fourth goal for the Rovers.

The lineup:

Meadowlarks, (15.)	Rovers, (2.)

PORES WINS TIME PRIZE.

Five-Mile Champion Shows Speed Against Big Field.

Charles Pores, national five and ten-mile running champion, gained the fast time prize yesterday in the handicap road race of the Lower Manhattan Athletic League, held over the Paulist A. C. course of about four miles. The diminutive title-holder, making his first competitive appearance in two months, completed the course in 21:16. At the end of the journey Pores took ninth position.

Pores was penalized one minute. The champion made his best running in the closing mile, when he gradually cut down his rivals, to whom he had conceded liberal handicaps. He was forced at top speed, however, to nip the veteran Craig Richards at the finish line. Pores, although he has renewed his affiliations with the Millrose A. A., competed unattached.

The race was won by M. Seinfeld, who started with a handicap of 2 minutes 15 seconds and led home a pack of seventeen rivals. His time was 22:55. Close to him were Eddie Trick, Paulist A. C., and J. Cerino, another Winged P runner. The three runners were staggering as they went over the finish line. The limit handicap runners were overtaken when about half the distance had been covered.

The team prize went to the Paulist A. C. over the Clark House A. A. by a score of 23 to 32.

Why Gladstone Valued his Razor

THE Grand Old Man of English politics might well have had our great Peace Conference in mind when he said: "I ask that we practice what we have so often preached, namely: that the concession of a local self-government is not the way to sap or impair, but it is the way to strengthen and consolidate a unity."

And the razor which Gladstone used was as sound in principle as his own views on the Rights of Man—dependable, keen and perfectly balanced, lacking only the safety and extra convenience of the guarded, two-edged

MUSIC

"Cleopatre" and "Loreley" New.

The Chicago Opera Association yesterday posted its operas for the company's third week in New York, starting next Monday with a repetition of Leroux's "Le Chemineau."

Massenet's "Cleopatre," with Mary Garden in the title role, will be new on Tuesday, and the following night Galli-Curci will sing in "The Barber of Seville."

Catalani's "Loreley" is another novelty on Thursday of next week, with Fitziu and Dolci. There are a Friday "Jongleur," with Garden, and Saturday matinee "Traviata," with Galli-Curci.

Galli-Curci Next at Hippodrome.

Music and society are to figure together in the second of the Campanini concerts at the Hippodrome next Sunday, when Galli-Curci makes her first concert appearance at a benefit for Stony Wold Sanatorium, the first such event given by the Stony Wold Auxiliary, it is said, in fifteen years. A committee of New York women is in charge of the boxes and floor, assisted by young girls of the Junior League.

The Chicago stars gave their first concert in the Hippodrome last evening without Anna Fitziu, who is to sing in "Isabeau" at the Lexington tonight. In her place both Forrest Lamont and Cyrena Van Gordon were added in the first part, led by Louis Hasselmans and Campanini, and including opera airs for Virgilio Lazzari, Stracciari and Journet, the last in Massenet's "Legend of the Sage" from "Le Jongleur."

Henri Fevrier conducted for the first time in America his hymn, "To Those Who Died for Their Land," sung by Alfred Maguenat to words by Charles Peguy, killed at the Marne. Polacco introduced the second part, in which Alessandro Dolci, tenor, made his début in airs from "Trovatore" and "Tosca," as well as a duet with Lazzari from Rossini's "Moses." Yvonne Gall gave an air from "Freischütz," and in conclusion, with Lamont and Journet, the trio from "Faust."

Caruso to Sing on Lincoln Day.

Caruso will sing a Lincoln's Day matinée of "Aida" at the Metropolitan on Wednesday of next week, with Mmes. Muzio, Claussen, and Sparkes, Messrs. Whitehill, Mardones, d'Angelo, and Audisio, Mr. Moranzoni conducting. Next Monday evening "Crispino e la Comare" and "Petrushka" will be repeated as a double bill.

Mischa Elman drew a great crowd of standees at the Metropolitan concert last evening, when the Russian violinist was heard in Mendelssohn's concerto, with the opera orchestra under Hageman, and later in Massenet's meditation from "Thais" and a Wieniawski polonaise.

May Peterson added "Comin' Thro' the Rye" and other encores to her songs, including the gavotte from "Manon" and lyrics by Laforge, Schindler, and Spross. Rafael Diaz had an air from "Romeo and Juliet," songs by Ronald and Chadwick, and Miss Foster's war piece, "The Americans Come."

There were concerts last evening by the Clef Club at the Selwyn, and by Martha Atwood, soprano, at the Princess Theatre.

Grainger Conducts and Plays.

Percy Grainger, now an American citizen and just out of the army, in which he taught our military musicians and himself learned to play unusual instruments in the band, returned to the stage for a day, as he will for longer next season, at yesterday's Carnegie Hall matinée of the Philharmonic Society, which was sold out to the doors.

Though nervous at his return, the pianist played with all his old freedom in Grieg's familiar concerto, and he conducted two of his own works, the "Mock Morris" dance in original orchestra version, and the "Colonial Song," in which he put in broad, simple melody, an expression of the life of his native Australia. Messrs. Megerlin, Kovarik, and Schulz in turn carried the solo air, reinforced by J. Lotito, harp, and W. H. Humiston, piano, with the addition of the euphonium in a full orchestral echo at the close.

Something of Grainger's interest in the songs and dances of plain people everywhere was reflected in Mr. Stransky's entire program, which ended with Dvorak's symphony, "From the New World." There was at the start Rimsky-Korsakoff's overture, "The Russian Easter," which recalls the bells of the Tikhvin monastery near the composer's boyhood home, and, as Montague Nathan has shown, emphasizes in its dancing measure "the contrast between the Orthodox festivals and the pagan rites in which they originated."

Casella's War "Films" Heard.

Alfredo Casella's "Films," which bore the sub-title "War Pictures" to mark their source in the recent worldwide reproduction of photographic scenes of war, made a profound impression at first hearing by yesterday's audience of the Symphony Society in Aeolian Hall. The young Italian composer's work, which Mr. Damrosch prefaced with a brief explanation, achieved distinction in the use of discord, notably in the exquisite anguish of the muted "Alsace: The Wooden Cross," relieved by a single broken quotation from the "Marseillaise."

Casella's "Cossack Ride" was added to the four little pieces announced, which included also a novel and realistic treatment of such episodes and scenes as the German cavalry passing through Belgium, the ruins of Rheims Cathedral, representing France, and a warship on the Adriatic, for the composer's own Italy. There was characterization in the music of remarkable power and more extraordinary brevity. The work should be heard again.

Raoul Vidas repeated his recent performance of Mozart's violin concerto in E flat, and Mr. Damrosch conducted Schumann's fourth symphony and Wagner's finale from "The Rhine Gold."

ALLIES IN ADRIANOPLE.

Sale of Delane Letters Held Up.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—An injunction was granted in the Chancery Division yesterday to prevent the auction of the Delane letters. These are letters received by John Delane, the famous editor of The London Times. It is explained that some of the letters were from public persons, and if they fell into the hands of unscrupulous people or were published they might cause serious annoyance or even scandal.

69TH AT THE REGIMENT ARMORY
LEXINGTON

THE SCREEN

Speaking generally, John Barrymore is an actor of double talent. Formerly he was known on the stage for unusual ability in comedy, and latterly in "Justice" and "Redemption," for example, he has achieved distinction in tragic rôles. Any one who has seen him in both characters must recognize that his serious work is infinitely the greater art, and surely no one would have him turn back to the lighter rôles of his past. Yet, because he was so delightful in those still remembered comedies, one cannot be blamed for feeling a slight regret that it is practically impossible to have both Barrymores on the stage—that is, if one restricts his attention to the stage. If one will look elsewhere, however—namely, on the screen—the regret will vanish, because Barrymore, the comedian, remains on the screen, while Barrymore, the tragedian, continues on the stage. There are two Barrymores growing where but one grew before.

The word "growing" is not misapplied, for John Barrymore seems an even better comedian on the screen than he did on the stage. In addition to being an actor who can speak his lines, he has a remarkable talent for pantomime which finds full opportunity within the limits of photoplay technique, and he becomes more exact and expressive in each succeeding vehicle. His latest is "Here Comes the Bride," at the Strand this week, and to see him in the rôle of the bridegroom is to enjoy one of the most laughable farce characters known on the Broadway screens. Most people will probably remember the original of this piece of foolishness, and, taken by itself the play is so extravagant that one may be disinclined to follow it into its numerous far-fetched situations, but, with Barrymore in the leading rôle, supported by Faire Binney, Alfred Hickman, Frank Losee, and others, it is something to smile and laugh at from beginning to end. And John S. Robertson, the Director, should be included when credit is being distributed.

The Strand program this week has other numbers of merit, too. There is a color picture entitled "Catalonian Pyrenees" that is made up of beautiful views, and the "Educational" is interesting, with Raymond L. Ditmar's "Porcupines," and another of the "Analysis of Motion" pictures, showing boxing.

Cecil B. DeMille's "Don't Change Your Husband," at the Rialto this week, has the finished workmanship recognizable in the DeMille productions, and Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Lew Cody, Theodore Roberts, and Sylvia Ashton, in the principal characters, keep up to their high standard. But if dissatisfied wives were guided by the argument of "Don't Change Your Husband," the divorce courts would be more crowded than they are now. Its emphasis is all in favor of changes, provided its formula is followed.

When the story begins Leila is married to James Porter, a Glue King. James has lost his waist line, he chews up one end of a cigar while the other is burning, he knocks ashes on the rugs, he eats onions, and, all in all, offends Leila's delicate tastes in about everything he does. So she changes, and takes for husband Schuyler van Sutphen, an immaculate young philanderer, who wears his evening clothes well and dances divinely. Schuyler, however, continues to philander, and Leila has to smell whiskey on his breath instead of the onion odor of her first mate. She is heartily sick of her change when James reappears.

Left alone with his shortcomings he had taken pains to correct them. He had sworn off on the onions, he smoked carefully clipped cigars in a clean holder, he had shaved off his moustache, he had put himself under the tyranny of an athletic instructor, in fact, he had thoroughly and completely reformed. And he still loves Leila, so she gets him back, fashioned to her taste.

So, clearly, the moral of "Dont Change Your Husband" is "Change your husband—and then change back."

The Rialto magazine includes some magnificent views of Mount Edith Cavell, in Canada, released by the Ford Motor Company, and a number of other excellent chapters.

The principal films at the Rivoli this week are "Breed of Men," with William S. Hart, and "Model Girls," a Prizma color picture.

Allen Holubar's "The Heart of Humanity," continues in its seventh week at the Broadway.

Burton Holmes's subject at Carnegie Hall last night was "With the Yanks at the Front," and he will repeat the travelogue there this afternoon.
